This book is designed to preserve in fitting form the story of one section of that army of medical and surgical heroes who served with the American forces in the World War. Even with all the care taken in its preparation, it makes no pretense of being a complete record. But that would be impossible. The unselfish sacrifices, the heroism, the courage and morale of the men and women who carried on their difficult and trying professional work in conditions which involved not only imminent and constant danger but compelled them to work with the most rudimentary conveniences or none at all -- their story makes one of the epics of the great struggle. Just a cross section of one organization's experiences is given here, but it is a glimpse at the whole moving, tremendous picture. It may well be dedicated as a tribute to the thousands of heroic men and women who as physicians, surgeons and nurses performed their part so well that, whether humanly or professionally, it has been recognized as one of the wonders and glories of the war.

Preface

AT the Annual Meeting of the American Institute of Homeopathy held in Asbury Park, N. J. in June 1919 the Editor of this volume urged in his Business Address as President of the Institute that suitable steps be taken to publish a war record of American Homeopathy. At this time, details of the great conflict, so recently closed that many of our number were still in service, held the interest of all concerned. In the Fall of this year our General Office in Chicago was instructed to send out a service questionnaire to all of the homeopathic profession. With this information in hand the work of compiling and sifting has steadily proceeded during the past three years. Knowing full well that any postponement of the publication of these records would necessitate thorough revision and as time progressed a certain lack of interest and loss of detail would ensue, it was deemed best to procure quick action. However, other matters of greater and graver import compelled the Trustees of the Institute to withhold the necessary financial grant until the meeting at Chicago in June 1922 when final authorization was given.

The Editor was appointed a committee of one in 1920 to undertake the publication of the war records so that the deeds of the splendid units representing organized homeopathy and those of individual men and women serving in the war might be permanently preserved for themselves and posterity. Doctors Wesley T. Lee of Boston and Gilbert FitzPatrick of Chicago were added to the committee by the Editor. Annual reports as to progress were presented at each meeting of the Institute since 1919. At almost any period since 1920 the volume here presented could have been published had conditions permitted. Under the circumstances it has been necessary to entirely rewrite the manuscript and revise the records during the past year so as to note recent changes.

The American Institute of Homeopathy is indebted to our President, the Honorable Warren G. Harding, for his sympathetic dedication and for his thoughtful interest in permitting the publication of a photograph of himself. Acknowledgement is here made to the Surgeon Generals of the Army and Navy for permission to consult their official records. Without this help it would have been indeed difficult to present an authentic record.

While the Editor might lament the inertia and lack of interest shown by a large minority of the profession, it is a far more pleasant duty to applaud those who have lent a helping hand. For the never failing interest of General Charles E. Sawyer and the valuable contributions of Doctors Royal S. Copeland, Ralph A. Stewart and Wesley T. Lee grateful appreciation is here expressed. Dean Sutherland of Boston University, Dean Pearson of "Old Hahnemann," Doctors J. Harlan Wells, Gilbert FitzPatrick, Sarah Hobson, Thomas E. Costain, Edgar H. Howell and Jacob B. Deuel, Captain Paul M. Patterson of the Army and Commander Joel T. Boone of the Navy and others have given willingly of their time and energy to help insure the success of our undertaking. For his splendid spirit of cooperation our thanks are due to Mr. T. K. Gardner of the Globe Press, printers of this volume.

War Activities of Organized Homeopathy

CHARLES E. SAWYER

WHILE a few graduates of homeopathic colleges were in the regular Medical Corps of the Army and Navy and in the U.S. Public Health Service prior to the Great War, organized homeopathy as such was not recognized by these divisions of the Government. The experiences of some of our members during the Spanish-American War reacted unfavorably upon the school at large and in a few of the states it was quite difficult for a homeopath to be appointed to the Medical Corps of the National Guard. These facts seemed so unfair to those charged with the responsibility of national homeopathic affairs that it was deemed advisable by the officers of the American Institute of Homeopathy to develop and carry out some plan whereby the ability, ambition and capabilities of the homeopathic doctor could become a recognized part of government service in the existing exigency — the World War. At the regular meeting of the American Institute held in Rochester in June 1917, this condition of affairs was fully discussed and the President appointed a committee, consisting of Doctors Charles E. Sawyer of Marion, O., Frederick M. Dearborn of New York City and Scott Parsons of St. Louis, Mo., to procure equal recognition. The Board of Trustees of the Institute directed the committee to proceed to Washington in order to arrange for the reception of certain homeopathic hospital units and to procure the induction into the service of individual homeopathic physicians. These items attended to, organized homeopathy would be officially recognized and further participation might be considered a logical outcome.

It was decided that Doctors Sawyer and Dearborn should discuss the matter personally with Surgeon General Gorgas. Within a few days of the meeting at Rochester they sought a conference with the Surgeon General in Washington and were referred by him to an officer who was in charge of medical recruiting. This man was of the type who was apt to be a bit discouraging and even discourteous. Fortunately, he referred the committee to Colonel Robert E. Noble (later Major General Noble), the Personnel Officer, who at that time was acting upon applications for positions in the Medical Reserve Corps. General Noble was considerate and, after listening to the committee's story and hearing that a thousand competent and capable physicians and surgeons would be glad to volunteer for service, was favorably impressed. The committee further requested that all barriers be withdrawn so that homeopathic physicians might be accepted into the service without restriction. General Noble regarded all these propositions as feasible and personally satisfactory to him. However, like all military details at this stage of the war the committee found great difficulty in procuring affirmative action on the part of departmental officials higher up.

Realizing that stronger arguments would be necessary and that positive evidence must be presented, the committee appealed to the War Department thru the Medical Section of the Council of National Defense. It was requested that the homeopathic profession be called to a conference to be addressed by the Surgeon General and such other individuals as Doctor Franklin Martin, the Executive of the Medical Section, might deem best fitted to discuss with homeopathic representatives the subject of their collective participation. So it was that the Executive Committee of the American Institute called to Washington the leading homeopaths of the entire Union. This number included our foremost teachers and best known clinicians with the presidents and secretaries of thirty-one state societies. More than a hundred leaders in the profession met in conference on July 27th at the Willard Hotel in Washington.

This introduction of the profession to those in charge of military affairs in Washington was so effective and impressive that it was immediately agreed that homeopaths should be taken into the service on the same basis as those of other schools of medicine. This action was the foundation of the service finally rendered by organized homeopathy. At the close of the conference it was agreed by the committee that our branch of the profession should provide a thousand officers for the Medical Reserve Corps. These selections we felt sure would be capable of passing all tests required by either the Army or Navy for induction into service. At the time it may have looked as if this was a large obligation on the part of the committee and might seem to express an exaggerated confidence in the capacity of our organization. However, it is gratifying to note that not a thousand but 1,862 men of our school eventually were commissioned. This total includes a few who received line commissions or were officers in the uniformed Red Cross.

At the time of this gathering in Washington at least three hundred of our number were already in the service, having previously been in the National Guard or the Regular Army. This splendid contingent together with those who afterward volunteered and were accepted, rendered most capable and distinguished service. They received their due proportion of promotions, citations and decorations and likewise suffered to the extent that twenty-five of their number died in the service. In every sense of the word our branch of the profession made a glorious record and it is our right and privilege to be duly proud of it.

No record of the activities of organized homeopathy would be complete without referring to our medical students. Over six hundred of these young men were attached to the branches of the Student Army Training Corps in the various universities and independent medical colleges in which homeopathy was taught. An appreciable minority of these medical students enlisted in combat divisions and rendered service of a more active nature. The nurses of our various training schools all over the country early entered the service until a number estimated at 1,500 had enrolled. The three distinctly homeopathic units, those raised by the Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital, the Flower Hospital and the Metropolitan Hospital, were almost entirely manned by homeopathic graduates while a number of other units, such as that of the Rochester General Hospital, contained a large proportion of nurses from our training schools. A separate article in itself could be written of the deeds of these splendid women who, in many instances, were decorated and otherwise honored for their services at home and abroad. No one who has lived thru the stirring times of the Great War can forget the Draft Board Service. About 1,100 of our physicians served on these boards and on the Boards of Appeal, thereby giving freely of their time and effort in order that our country could raise a national army on democratic principles. While a goodly number of our men and women served on various County, City and State Councils of Defense, we were officially and nationally recognized by the appointments of Doctors Florence N. Ward, Charles E. Sawyer, Charles E. Kahlke and William B. Van Lennep to the Medical Section of the Council of National Defense and by the selection of Doctor Anna H. Shaw as chairman of the Womens Section of the Council.

Aside from membership in the Medical Corps of the Army and Navy, Public Health Service, S.A.T.C. and Draft Board activities, there was another matter which presented itself to the Country at large which was a more trying experience than that of inducing men to volunteer for active service. It is one thing to put on a uniform and participate in actual war and it is a far more difficult matter to submit to discipline and to give service without any particular glory. After a large number of our doctors had been called upon to assist in the building up of our great army it was impressed upon the authorities that the people at home, some hundred and five million in number, needed attention. This was particularly true because all that went to make up the army, to provide food, make munitions and construct equipment must of necessity be done at home.

Investigation showed there were many sections of the United States that were left without medical service. Entire counties in almost every state of the Union were found to be without a practicing physician. This brought even greater consternation than did the subject of recruiting for the Reserve Corps, because it demonstrated that the source of supply for local demands was nearly exhausted. Out of this necessity, which was very apparent to all of the doctors remaining at home, an organization known as The Volunteer Medical Service Corps of America was formed. This organization was at first necessarily largely a paper organization. Early in 1914 the threatening needs had been well canvassed, general policies had been established and the underlying principles had been quite thoroughly evolved, but there was needed a real, working, active, organized plan of execution to carry on the work effectively.

Doctor Franklin Martin, who was the head of the organization, wired Doctor C. E. Sawyer of Marion, O. and requested that he come to Washington to help work out and develop a system whereby the needs of home service could be provided for. By unanimous vote of the Volunteer Medical Service Corps then existing, Doctor Sawyer was made secretary of this organization. He was also appointed a member of the Medical Section of the Council of National Defense and was given other responsibilities which made it necessary for him to remain in Washington. Here with the assistance of other representatives of the Corps then stationed in Doctor Martin's office, there was developed a scheme of organization for the Volunteer Medical Service Corps. This resulted in 77,000 doctors throughout the United States signing a pledge to render service whenever called upon whether in the Reserve Corps of the Army or Navy, Public Health Service, or on any assignment that might be given them anywhere in a civilian capacity.

In my opinion volunteering for this service was the very highest expression of patriotism that was ever manifested by the citizens of any nation in the world. The agreement which these men signed obligated them to leave their business upon a moment's notice and go wherever they might be delegated to serve, without compensation and for any length of time that might be required. By this arrangement physicians in many states of the Union were taken out of the larger centers and sent into smaller fields to care for all needing professional service — a duty and responsibility glorious and effective. While we have everlasting gratitude for those who went into the service of their Country as volunteers in the Medical Reserve Corps, we must frankly state that we as Americans owe as much in the way of respect and consideration to the members of the Volunteer Medical Service Corps as to those in the Reserve Corps. I wish to go on record as expressing a feeling, that the homeopathic profession did subscribe, almost to a man, to the tenets of the Volunteer Medical Service Corps and that all such Volunteers are entitled to great praise and the highest appreciation by all American citizens.

There really was no more trying position to fill than that of a man in the Volunteer Medical Service Corps. This association did not afford the distinction of uniform, the influence of compensation, or the glory of combat, but it did demand sacrifice of business, separation from friends and family and many of the privations of active warfare on the battle-front. Because of this really heroic service rendered without compensation, rank or public acclaim, I would offer as a token of esteem for all homeopaths so enlisted the gratitude and benediction of an appreciative audience. It is my hope that when the final and completed history of the World War is written it will register the names of the members of the Volunteer Medical Service Corps as it will those in active fields of service.

ROYAL S. COPELAND

IN the organization of Unit "N," Flower Hospital gained the distinction of establishing Homeopathy's right to governmental recognition. It can be said to the credit of President Wilson, Secretary Baker and Surgeon General Gorgas that Homeopathy was promised equal opportunity in the plans for national defense. Unfortunately, however, the desires of those in authority are not always carried out by the administrative officials.

The beginning of hostilities found the United States poorly prepared. The heads of departments were driven and distracted. It was extremely difficult to gain access to the prime actors in the great tragedy. On this account it was not easy to get decisions on important matters. The under officials dreaded to accept responsibility. Not until the war had progressed considerably were the weak, vacillating and irresponsible personages weeded out of the service. As in every other enterprise, until the seriousness of the project was realized, efforts were made to place favorites and individual prejudice was given full play. It was hard to break through this armor plate of pettiness and irresponsibility.

I shall never forget that memorable April 28th, 1917, when Major Ralph A. Stewart and I bearded the Red Cross lion in his den. Failing to get action on our earlier appeals made by mail and telephone, we went to Washington under instructions from the Trustees and Faculty of the New York Homeopathic Medical College and Flower Hospital to ask authority of the Red Cross to form an Army Base Hospital. Our very good friend, Assistant Surgeon General Robert E. Noble, had advised us that Col. Jefferson R. Kean of the Medical Corps, had been made Director General of Military Relief of the American Red Cross. To Col. Kean had been given authority to organize hospital units. We proceeded to the Red Cross Building for the exciting interview which followed.

Col. Kean was frankly reluctant to give permission to Flower Hospital to enlist a Unit. He raised every possible objection, chief of which was that the government would authorize no more Red Cross Base Hospital Units, because a sufficient number had been approved to supply the existing needs. By this time Col. Kean was circumnavigating the room, making a complete circle at least once in two minutes. Catching him by the coat-tail I drew him back into his chair, saying: "What is the real reason you look with disfavor on our patriotic request?" Then it came out: "Flower Hospital is a homeopathic hospital, is it not?" "It certainly is," I replied, "but what has that to do with the question at issue?" There followed a long discussion on homeopathy and the legal standing of homeopathic graduates. The Colonel's questions sounded like a voice from the tomb.

Finally, Col. Kean was convinced that homeopathic physicians possessed medical and surgical skill, as well as patriotism. We had paved the way and opened the gates so that eventually organized Homeopathy and its Units from Boston and New York entered the army and had a part in ending the great conflict. Of course there were other hurdles to jump, as Director William F. Honan of the Metropolitan Unit can testify. Together we made a trip or two to Washington in the interest of the Metropolitan Base Hospital, but in the end it all came out right. Homeopathy had its chance and rose nobly to its privileges and opportunity.

Under date of April 30th, 1917, Col. Kean wrote me as follows:

THE AMERICAN RED CROSS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

30th April 1917.

Dr. Royal S. Copeland
Flower Hospital
58 Central Park West, New York City.
My dear Doctor Copeland:

In confirmation of our conversation I hereby authorize you to organize, as its Director, a Hospital Unit at Flower Hospital, New York City. I will be glad to receive your formal acceptance of this appointment and duty.

Literature and muster-in rolls are being sent under separate cover.

It is hoped that you will select a Chief Nurse who will be able to get together a fine detachment of nurses for this unit. Please let me know at your earliest convenience, if you have not already done so, the name of the nurse selected for this important position, in order that I may refer it to the Director of Nursing Bureau, this office, for confirmation.

It is thought, in view of the fact that war has come and there is a prospect of sufficient appropriations by the government for medical and hospital purposes, that it will not be necessary in the future to call on Red Cross Chapters to furnish funds for the purchase of equipment for Hospital Units, and that this equipment will be supplied by the Medical Department of the Army.

The designation of your unit will be HOSPITAL UNIT "N."

Very sincerely yours,

(signed) J. R. KEAN

Director General of Military Relief.

The story of the organization and the activities of the Flower Hospital Unit is told in Major Stewart's words in the article that follows. It is a matter of pride to all the friends of Homeopathy that all our hospital organizations, contributions to the cause of patriotism and the world's protection, did their duty, winning fame and the undying appreciation of the Nation. They served and suffered in order that the cause of civilization might live.

Unit "N" and General Hospital No. 5

RALPH A. STEWART

IMMEDIATELY after the entrance of the United States into the war, the Board of Trustees and Faculty of the New York Homeopathic Medical College and Flower Hospital asked authority of the Red Cross to form an Army Base Hospital. To the bitter disappointment of the college authorities the Red Cross replied that the government would authorize no more Red Cross Base Hospitals for the present because a sufficient number were in the process of formation, but that Hospital Units were needed and their formation would be authorized. Thereupon, Dean Royal S. Copeland was directed to ask permission to form a hospital unit and this was granted under date of April 30, 1917.

Dean Copeland was designated Director of the Unit and he began immediately to assemble the personnel. By June 14th the necessary quota of officers, nurses and enlisted men was obtained. Before the organization was completed, our Faculty by unanimous vote decided that the best interests of the college demanded that the Dean remain at his post and that some other Director be selected to head the Unit. This was in line with the policy of the Federal Government to keep the medical colleges of the country going at full capacity so that the supply of young doctors might not be lessened. The Red Cross accepted the decision of the Faculty and appointed as Dean Copeland's successor, Doctor Ralph A. Stewart. Dean Copeland accepted gracefully the decision of his Faculty but I feel sure it was one of the greatest disappointments of his life that he could not head the Unit. He continued to work for it and was of the greatest help throughout its service.

Commissioned Personnel, Flower Hospital Unit "N" at Ft. Ontario, N. Y., October 1917.

Front Row — Lieut. Wilcox, Capt. Bodenheimer, Capt. Doremus, Major Stewart,

Lieut. Col. Thomason, Capt. Cornwell, Capt. Thompson.

Lieut. Willan, Capt. Burns, Lieut. Whitmarsh.

The following comprised the personnel:

OFFICERS

	Original Rank	Final Rank
Ralph A. Stewart	Major	Major
John F. White	Captain	Major
Arthur F. Thompson	Captain	Major
Frank W. Cornwell	Captain	Major
Milton Bodenheimer	Captain	Major

Donald E. Braee	Lieutenant	Captain
Maxwell G. Keeler	Lieutenant	Captain
Clark A. Wilcox	Lieutenant	Captain
John J. Cunningham	Lieutenant	Major
Edward H. Willan	Lieutenant	Captain
Lyman J. Spalding	Lieutenant	Lieutenant

Doctor Doremus resigned from the Unit before it was ordered to Fort Ontario and Doctor Whitmarsh took his place. However, through some misunderstanding, Doctor Doremus was ordered to Ontario with the Unit and served with it as Officers' Instructor and Detachment Commander up to December, when he was ordered back to Ft. Oglethorpe where he was serving when ordered to join the Unit. He was a most capable officer and the entire personnel of the Unit was loath to have him leave.

By June 10th all the doctors selected for the staff had received their commissions in the Officers Reserve Corps of the Army. Soon thereafter the nurses chosen were sworn into the service of the Red Cross and the detachment was enlisted in the Army. Then followed a period of waiting for assignment to duty. All were anxious to get into service and time hung heavy. Bi-weekly drills about the streets of Flower Hospital helped to keep alive the interest of the Corps. The Ladies' Auxiliary of Flower Hospital were busy getting together the requisite supplies of surgical dressings. Through the efforts of Doctor William Tod Helmuth and his friends sufficient funds were collected to purchase the designated surgical instruments. He also obtained donations of three ambulances, one truck and a seven passenger automobile. This equipment was not authorized for hospital units but it proved a great blessing and Uncle Sam seemed not a bit loath to accept and use it.

After what seemed an interminable period of time to all concerned, orders were received for the Unit to proceed to Fort Ontario, N. Y. to become the nucleus of the personnel of a base hospital which was to be formed there by Lieut. Col. Henry D. Thomson. Two of the officers were ordered there July 2nd as an advance guard. The corps followed August 2nd, the remaining officers August 15th, and the nurses arrived around September 1st.

So finally the entire Unit was assembled at Fort Ontario ready to begin the arduous task of establishing a base hospital, designated No. 51 and changed to U.S.A. General Hospital No. 5 in December 1917.

Hospital Unit "N" as an entity had only this one assignment. Five of its officers served there continuously. The remaining seven officers, the nurses and corps saw service elsewhere, but only after being detached from the Unit. Therefrom, the history of Unit "N" is a part of the history of U.S.A. General Hospital No. 5.

The organization (where it was other than plain hard work) was a military rather than a professional job but it was a novel experience and everyone set about it with a vim. Before long out of an Infantry Post with the usual barracks buildings, store houses, officers' quarters and Post Hospital (a miniature affair of twelve beds) gradually arose the semblance of an institution which very soon took on the appearance and function of a creditable hospital of five hundred beds.

The hospital was ready before many patients arrived, so the time was utilized by officers and men in routine military instruction and drill. The officers accomplished a course prescribed for medical officers training camps and the corps became expert in military instruction and drill, beside giving considerable time to instruction in hospital duties. During the early months of our Country's participation in the war, the hospital administrative work was handled by the medical officers. Later this was changed and the administrative end was taken care of by officers of the Sanitary Corps. So it happened that our doctors were immediately given administrative work which employed either their entire time or a part of it. Thus with administrative and professional work, the personnel during the first winter (1917-18) managed to keep comfortably busy and fairly contented. The novelty of army work made all reasonably happy and the hope and expectation of orders any day to overseas duty kept everyone on the qui vive.

The air was full of rumors; every week brought a new batch. These helped out the long winter months.

Our hospital received patients from Syracuse Camp, Madison Barracks and Pine Plain Camp which were from thirty to seventy miles distant. Three hundred cases were sent from Camps Dix and Devens for operation, during this winter. From all sources the hospital had an average census, during the first ten months of its existence, of one hundred and thirteen cases. From June 1918 the work of the hospital increased, due especially to greater activity at Syracuse Camp, to the arrival of overseas cases in constantly increasing numbers, and the epidemic of influenza which was particularly severe in all the territory in Northern New York served by our hospital. At the height of the epidemic in September 1918 the hospital, with a normal capacity of five hundred and fifty beds, had a census of eleven hundred. Barracks and hospital buildings under construction were utilized and crowded to capacity with patients. The average census for the last fourteen months of the life of the hospital was six hundred.

General Hospital No. 5 was designated for genito-urinary cases. After the first ten months of its existence there was always a large genito-urinary service, largely from Syracuse Camp which was at the time filled with deferred class men. The hospital, however, was never strictly genito-urinary. It was always general in work as well as in name. General surgery averaged the largest service, genito-urinary conditions, second, medicine, third, eye, ear, nose and throat, fourth, dental, fifth and neuropsychiatry, with a service which averaged around thirty, brought up the rear. At one time the hospital was considered for neuropsychiatry exclusively, and all the patients with their officers, nurses and corps from Dansville General Hospital were sent to Ontario upon the closing of the Dansville institution. After a couple of months stay they were retransferred to the general hospital at Hampton Roads, Va. During the winter of 1917-18 our hospital had upwards of one hundred cases of tuberculosis and there was a rumor that the hospital was to be used for this class of cases. Tubercular cases fared especially well in this climate, strange as that may seem, as the hospital was on the shores of Lake Ontario. The X-Ray and Pathological Laboratories were fully equipped and manned with excellent officers in their respective lines. U.S.A. General Hospital No. 5 was a well balanced institution and finely equipped to handle successfully a general class of work.

About holiday time, 1917, occurred the first break in the personnel of the Unit. Lieut. Lyman J. Spalding received orders to proceed to the Medical Training Camp at Ft. Oglethorpe. In May following, Major Thompson and Captain Keeler were ordered to Camp Syracuse. About the same time a score of our corps was detached from the Unit and became part of a replacement unit and sent overseas. Soon thereafter Captain Brace was ordered to Allentown, Pa. to join an anesthetic unit forming there for overseas duty, but plans were changed and the Captain missed his opportunity to serve abroad. Late in August Majors White and Bodenheimer received orders to join Evacuation Hospitals forming in Western camps, arriving in France a few days before the Armistice was signed. Captain Cunningham and ten of the enlisted men were transferred to Base Hospital No. 70 forming at Ft. Ontario under the auspices of U.S.A. General Hospital No. 5, and all went to France in September with this organization. About ten of the corps men were sent to various camps to undergo training for commissions and all were successful. In midsummer, orders began to arrive for one unit nurse after another to proceed to the Port of Embarkation and by September 1918 all our nurses were in France.

The remainder of Unit "X" served at Ft. Ontario with Colonel Thomason and U.S.A. General Hospital No. 5 until discharged from the service. The one wish and expectation of each and every one of our Unit was to see service abroad but as good soldiers, they did their duty where Uncle Sam saw fit to place them.

Foreword

THE purpose of this story is to furnish a briefly comprehensive account of the wanderings and work of United States Army Base Hospital Forty-Four. No attempt is made to describe in detail the activities of the Unit, or to give a complete statistical statement of its accomplishments. To those who were participants in "The Battle of Pougues" memory will supply an endless succession of interesting, exciting, amusing, and trying additions: they will "read between the lines" a vast number of incidents and experiences which space and wisdom make it inadvisable to publish. To any "non-combatants" perusing these pages, imagination must produce the coloring necessary to render the picture sufficiently vivid.

ONE of the most important lessons which have been learned from the wars of the past is that the proper care of the sick and wounded and careful attention to the sanitary, hygienic, dietetic and other measures which are employed to prevent the development of disease largely determine the efficiency of the army. Within a comparatively few years the most elaborate practical scientific methods have been evolved and perfected for the prevention of disease and the care of disabled men in the service. To the hospital corps has been delegated the task of caring for the sick and wounded, and the functions of the various units comprising this essential branch of the service have been thoroughly worked out. Not the least in importance of these several departments constituting the hospital corps is the base hospital, which functionates as a clearing house between the field and evacuation hospitals, situated comparatively near the area of combat, and the general, special, rest and recreation institutions located at long distances from the firing lines.

In peace times the maintenance of a small, well organized, and efficient hospital corps is sufficient to care for the incapacitated members of the standing army; but, immediately upon the declaration of war, it is necessary to enlarge tremendously this branch of the service. To be prepared to meet war conditions, base hospital units representing civic interests and enrolled under the American Red Cross are organized for military emergency. Such hospitals have no connection with the army until accepted by the United States Government, when they automatically pass from the control of the Red Cross to that of the War Department. These hospitals are developed in connection with large medical institutions, the professional personnels being chosen from the staffs of the hospitals, and the necessary supplies being provided by the institutions. In this way complete base hospitals with entire personnels and full equipment are organized under the authorization and control of the American Red Cross ready for transfer to the Government in case of emergency. When mobilized for active duty, each base hospital is supplied with executive officers by the War Department, consisting of a commanding officer, an adjutant and a quartermaster.

Such a unit possesses many advantages. It is organized and equipped without expense to the Government; its staff is composed of men who have worked together and who are familiar with each other's abilities and methods; its activities have the moral and financial backing of a large and interested clientele; and its personnel is stimulated to its best efforts by a desire to do credit to the mother institution.

1. FALL IN!

There were approximately twenty-five base hospitals partially or completely organized in this country when the United States Government declared war upon the German Empire on the sixth day of April, 1917, a number manifestly inadequate to meet the needs of such a military establishment as would have to be developed. It was necessary that other large medical institutions than those already included should organize base hospitals under the authorization of the American Red Cross; and the Trustees and Staff of the Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital were not slow to recognize the opportunity to "do their bit" for the country and for the medical profession. A meeting of the hospital staff was held early in May, and it was unanimously voted to recommend that an offer be made to the American Red Cross to organize a base hospital in connection with this institution. Such an offer was forwarded by the Board of Trustees, and, after some correspondence and explanation, a definite promise was made by the Red Cross that the authorization for the formation of a base hospital would be forthcoming, provided that the sum of $30,000 should be raised for the purchase of its equipment. A plan was immediately developed for securing the required amount of money, and an intensive ten days financial campaign was inaugurated in the latter part of May, which resulted in a large oversubscription of the amount needed. The Red Cross was at once notified that its conditions had been fulfilled, and a little later the funds were transferred to that organization. Early in June authorization by the American Red Cross was received to organize Base Hospital Thirty-Nine in behalf of the War Department of the United States.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the hospital Dr. William F. Wesselhoeft was nominated as the Director, and Mrs. Alice H. Flash as the Chief Nurse, and these nominations were subsequently accepted, and the appointments formally made by the authorities at Washington. Mr. Arthur F. Estabrook was named the disbursing agent, and the money which had been raised was transferred to him by the Red Cross. Col. Peabody of the Metropolitan Chapter of the American Red Cross in Boston, was appointed purchasing agent, and he delegated the task of procuring the equipment for the hospital to Dr. H. M. Pollock, Superintendent of the Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital.

In response to an appeal to the members of the profession associated with the hospital about seventy physicians offered their services, and the task of selecting a personnel was begun. This proved a most difficult undertaking, as it was essential that the work of the parent institution should not be seriously interfered with, while it was of the utmost importance that a congenial aggregation of men should be chosen, with skill and attainments covering a large portion of the requirements of surgical and medical practice. After due consideration, the twenty-two professional men allowed by the table of organization of a five hundred bed hospital were selected, a chaplain was appointed and sixty-five graduate registered nurses were chosen from a much larger number volunteering. To Dr. Allan W. Rowe was delegated the authority to enroll the one hundred and fifty-three men comprising the enlisted personnel, and to tentatively assign them to the departments of the prospective hospital in which they were best fitted to work.

During the summer the task of organizing and equipping the Unit progressed rapidly. The officers received their commissions; physical examinations, vaccinations and inoculations were done; and the enlisted personnel was chosen from over seventeen hundred applicants. Many of the enlisted men received training in the hospital wards, and the tremendous task of purchasing the vast amount of required supplies was carried forward. Every effort was made to complete the work as quickly as possible, for it was supposed that the Unit would be called into active service early in the fall. A library of medical books was collected through purchase or gifts of members of the profession; a supply of homeopathic medicines was donated by Otis Clapp and Son of Boston; a special gift of money for the purchase of sleeping bags for the nurses was made by Mrs. Pierce of Wakefield, and a beautiful flag was given by Mr. Francis Stearns of Boston.

As the weeks slipped by and nothing more substantial developed than innumerable rumors concerning the future movements of the Unit, some alterations in the plans were made and several changes in the personnels became desirable for special reasons. Owing to a misunderstanding in the original assignment of numbers by the Red Cross, it was necessary to change the number of the Unit, and the organization became Base Hospital Forty-Four.

During this period of waiting, opportunity was given to develop and perfect plans for the future work of the Base Hospital; to select apparatus which would be especially useful in the work of the members of the staff; and for the special training of many of the officers in the military schools, camps and hospitals. Twenty of the nurses volunteered for temporary service, and were assigned for duty in some of the cantonments on the nineteenth of November.

Early in February, 1918, notification was received that the capacity of the Hospital was to be increased from five hundred to one thousand beds, and authorization was shortly obtained to make the necessary additions to the personnels. The commissioned staff was enlarged to thirty-two medical officers; thirty-five nurses were added to the nurse corps, making a total of one hundred, and forty-seven enlisted men were enrolled, bringing the number of the enlisted personnel up to two hundred.

2. COUNT OFF!

The long deferred and anxiously awaited action of the War Department came, when, on the twentieth of February, 1918, Special Order No. 52 was issued, directing Captain Lee "to proceed from Camp Greenleaf to Boston for the purpose of mobilizing the enlisted personnel of Base Hospital 44," and specifying that "upon completion of the mobilization, he should proceed, together with the enlisted personnel, to Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J., for temporary duty at the Base Hospital." The requirements of the order were carried out, and on Sunday, March 10, at one o'clock, at the Out-Patient Department of the Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital, the first roll call of the organization was held. Of the one hundred and fifty-three enlisted men included in the order, one hundred and forty-seven responded; two men failed to appear, one man was sick in the hospital, and the others were awaiting official transfer from another branch of the service. Chaplain Wylie also reported for the purpose of accompanying the Unit. Lunch was served, and an inspiring address was delivered by Director, Major Wesselhoeft. Mr. Baker, President of the Board of Trustees of the Hospital, extended his felicitations and good wishes in behalf of the institution.

In a heavy snow storm the Command proceeded by special trolley cars to the armory in Charlestown, which was reached at three o'clock; and the task of outfitting was at once begun. The garments of civilian life were discarded, and from their skins out these men became soldiers. Fortune favored those whose names began with the early letters of the alphabet, and many were the misfits which developed as the length of the waiting line decreased. The scene became almost pathetic as the last men displayed their newly acquired belongings, and endeavored to enclose number nine feet in size seven shoes, or to take up the slack in a pair of trousers at least eight sizes too large. Exchanges were in order, and the evening was occupied in friendly "swaps" and in preparations for the night. When "taps" was sounded the tired boys lay down upon their army cots under the arching roof of a military shelter, and slept—or thought. The activities and interests of civilian life had suddenly been temporarily, perhaps forever, terminated; they were leaving all that was dear and familiar to them, and were entering upon a new and tremendous adventure. They had ceased to be free moral agents, and were now units in a vast military organization, with no will but to obey, and no definite knowledge of what was before them.

Monday was spent in adjustments of seemingly impossible combinations and conditions of equipment; and the officers and soldiers at the armory were most kind and helpful, doing everything possible to facilitate matters. At six o'clock the Command left the building, proceeding to South Station by trolley, and occupying three special cars attached to the Federal express which left Boston at 7:30. As strict orders had been given that the time and place of leaving should not be announced, the departure was entirely lacking in the emotionalism and enthusiasm usually characterizing such occasions.

The Detachment was supposed to reach Camp Dix in the early morning of March twelfth, but owing to a long delay in New York, did not arrive until after nine o'clock. Undaunted by the fact that the reception committee and the band had failed to materialize to bid them welcome, the sturdy soldiers marched to the Base Hospital, where they were informed that arrangements had been made to have them temporarily cared for at the 303rd. Sanitary Train. A half hour's hike brought them to their destination, and having partaken of a special mess, the task of getting placed and adjusted was begun. Acting on the principle that "an army moves on its stomach," mess kits were at once issued. Cots were then assigned in the barracks of Field Hospitals 311 and 312, and Ambulance Companies 309, 311 and 312, sections of the Sanitary Train.

A volume might be written about the experiences of the three weeks spent at this first station. The commanding officer of the Sanitary Train, Major Webster Calvin, did everything possible to make his temporary guests comfortable, and the officers of the organizations with which the men were quartered, were uniformly considerate and helpful. Lieutenant S. A. Vanderwater devoted a large part of his time to drilling and instructing the men, and his kindness and valuable assistance will never be forgotten. Headquarters were established, and Sergeant Perkins, the only non-commissioned officer with the outfit, assumed the responsibility for the paper work. A barracks sergeant was chosen for each of the five buildings in which the men were quartered; temporary clerks, noncommissioned officers and squad leaders were appointed; and various working details were arranged. Drills and hikes were the chief features of the daily schedule, and competitive weekly drills were held; a course of lectures was given by officers of the camp; a series of French lessons was begun; inoculations and vaccinations were completed; allotments and insurances were written; sports were arranged, and exciting baseball games were played and won; religious services were held; ordnance and equipment were issued; inspections were endured; and a vast amount of routine work was accomplished under difficult conditions. The men all entered the new life with a determination to "make good," and their development as soldiers was rapid and inspiring. There were no occasions for punishment; very few cases of illness developed; the morale of the men was at the maximum; and the officers of the Sanitary Train were enthusiastic in their praises of the men and their work.

On the first day of April an order came for the Unit to leave its temporary abode, and to transfer to the Camp Dix Base Hospital. With many regrets the men packed their belongings into their barracks bags and left the good friends and pleasant associations connected with the Sanitary Train. With all their possessions on or attached to them, they toiled perspiringly across the fields under a scorching midday sun, and arrived at their destination tired but "game." Quarters were assigned and the next phase of their army life was begun; but the members of the Unit who passed through the vicissitudes of the life at the 303rd. Sanitary Train, look back upon the three weeks spent there as among the best and happiest in their military experiences.

Meanwhile Capt. Wiggin had been called to active duty for the purpose of mobilizing the forty-seven men needed to complete the two hundred comprising the enlisted personnel. On the second of April he and forty-four men arrived at the Base Hospital, after having passed through a preliminary process similar to that experienced by the original contingent.

Orders for the mobilization of the commissioned personnel were received early in April and within a few days the medical officers had nearly all reported for duty. The Nurse Corps was mobilized on the first of April, and the nurses were divided into detachments and stationed in fourteen cantonments for duty. By the middle of April the mobilization of the Unit was practically completed.

3. RIGHT DRESS!

The training of the members of the organization for their overseas duties was at once begun at Camp Dix. The officers were assigned to various stations in the hospital for the purpose of observing and assisting, thus familiarizing themselves with the methods of an army institution. The enlisted men were detailed to different departments for work, each man being given experience in the duties which he would be expected to perform in his own organization. Drills were held daily; but the military aspect of the routine was subsidiary to the task of training the men in hospital technique and army methods.

The experiences gained in the weeks spent at the Base Hospital were valuable, and were conducive to the success of the work done when the Unit was "placed upon its own." Incidentally the presence of our men was of distinct advantage to the hospital, and for a considerable period of time the members of Forty-Four were, to a large extent, carrying on the routine work of the institution. It is unnecessary to record that their work was of the highest grade and that it was appreciated by those in authority.

During this developmental period many interesting and exciting events transpired. The arrival of Major Wilds on the sixteenth of April ended the numerous speculations as to who the commanding officer was to be. Various "moving days" developed; the officers left their comfortable and congenial location in Ward 33, and were distributed as more or less unwelcome guests among the officers of the Base Hospital in the officers quarters; while the enlisted men were shifted from ward to barracks, from laundry to barracks to laundry (all in the same afternoon), from chapel to barracks, and from barracks to other barracks in a dizzy manner. A mild and quickly controlled epidemic of scarlet fever developed early in April, and another of German measles shortly after; but only eleven of the enlisted men were sick and all made a complete and uninterrupted recovery. The first pay day for the men occurred on the twelfth of April and was a time of considerable interest and importance. Wrightstown, a flourishing metropolis consisting of a few permanent inhabitants, and a considerable wartime population with commercial aspirations situated within easy access of the hospital, gave opportunity for shopping, amusement, and refreshment, of which the men freely availed themselves. The palatial establishment known as the "Bucket of Blood" was somewhat popular. St. George's, the Liberty Theatre, the "Big Y" and the Hostess House, all situated in or near the camp, offered many attractions which helped to keep the men happy.

The members of the Unit rapidly became adjusted to the conditions of their new life and work, and were generally well satisfied. Naturally the question, "when do we sail?" was uppermost in the minds of all, and there were many wise ones who could read the future or who had "inside dope" which enabled them to answer the query satisfactorily to themselves.

4. MARK TIME!

On the nineteenth of April, an official message was received which stated that the Unit would leave for overseas duty on or before the first of May, and a period of intense activity was at once inaugurated. The commanding officer made a hasty trip to Washington; messengers hurried hither and yon; frantic efforts were made to complete the equipment of the men; baggage was weighed and marked; daily physical inspections were held; good-by letters and messages were sent; the office force worked night and day preparing passenger lists, qualification cards, and endless collections of data; all leaves of absence and passes were refused; each man was "on his toes." The official photograph of the organization was taken on the twenty-fourth, and the final inspection of the equipment was made by a headquarters officer on the twenty-sixth. The Unit was reported to be ready to move.

Sunday, the twenty-eighth, was a memorable day. The fond parents, distressed wives, tearful sweethearts and admiring relatives and friends of the brave soldier boys flocked into camp by train and automobile, and the adieus were said and done. The parting of the ways had apparently been reached, and the Unit awaited the command, "Forward, March!"

5. AT EASE!

The fateful day arrived—and nothing happened. Other days came and went and still no orders were forthcoming. Rumors there were aplenty, but the "powers that be" preserved a sphinx-like silence. Gradually the tension relaxed; daily inspections were discontinued; work details were resumed in a half hearted manner; everybody was disappointed and many were discouraged. As orders for the Unit to move were expected at any time, it was not considered safe to issue passes covering periods of more than a few hours, and thus the men were virtually confined to the vicinity of the cantonment. Some of the men had their wives boarded near the camp, but most of them lived in the expectation that three day passes would be granted, enabling them to visit their homes. On two occasions such passes were forthcoming for a portion of the Command and there were wild scrambles for the coveted slips of paper.

Several false alarms developed, one of which having such a close resemblance to the "real article," that another final physical and equipment inspection was held on the thirty-first of May. Naturally this state of uncertainty and the frequent sudden calling of the men from their duties in the hospital, seriously interfered with their work, and materially affected the morale of the members of the Unit unfavorably. Many were willing to "put up good money" that Base Hospital Forty-Four would never go overseas, and were anxious to transfer to some other unit which they felt sure would be called for foreign service. Officers and enlisted men alike felt the depression of this trying period and found it difficult to keep up courage.

To add to the difficulties of the situation, Wrightstown went bad from a sanitary standpoint, and entrance to this panacea for the blues was absolutely prohibited. And as though this disaster was not sufficient to make life miserable, the camp was closed to visitors over three week ends owing to the movement of troops, and nobody was allowed to leave the cantonment during the same periods.

Among the many interesting occurrences during this interim a few stand out prominently. On April nineteenth the first announcement of ratings of enlisted men was made, and resulted in both pleasure and dissatisfaction. The work done by the men had been so uniformly good, and so many had attained equally high standing, that it was extremely difficult to determine to whom the limited number of advancements allowed should go, and many who were not favored were naturally disappointed. The officers will never forget the "continuous performance" at Cafeteria No. 1 during the latter part of May, when they examined sixteen thousand drafted men arriving at the camp, working night and day until the task was completed. On the twenty-third of June Lieut. Fellows was married in one of the mess rooms, with a few of the officers and enlisted men of Forty-Four as witnesses.

The first death to be recorded in the Unit occurred in May, when Miss Evelyn Petrie, a member of the Nurse Corps, died at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as a result of being thrown by a frightened horse, while riding. She was a graduate from the Training School of the Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital, and resided in Boston. The tragic circumstances associated with her death rendered the affair especially sad.

TO ARMS

1. FORWARD!

On the second of July, just as three-day passes were about to be distributed to a large number of the men, the order arrived for the Unit to prepare to proceed overseas. Again the final inspections were made, and the last things were attended to. In the morning of the fifth the Command marched to the station and entrained, and at ten o'clock the long journey was begun. Jersey City was reached at 12:45 o'clock, and Bush Terminal at 2:30. At 4 o'clock the men boarded Transport No. 610, formerly the Ulysses of the Blue Funnel Line. The enlisted men were assigned to quarters as far astern and as near the bottom of the vessel as it was possible to get, and occupied bunks on two decks. During the night, troops continued to embark, and before morning the boat was completely filled with men and freight.

Early in the morning of the sixth the transport dropped down stream and anchored in the midst of other vessels crowded with troops; and at 10:40 o'clock the entire convoy began its perilous voyage. It was inspiring and interesting to watch the big dirigible floating overhead, the aeroplanes circling in all directions, the little destroyers keeping guard in the distance; and it gave to all a feeling of security, to realize that the armored cruiser, the Pueblo, was to accompany the fleet.

To the transports leaving New York, others were added on the seventh and eighth, so that the final number of vessels was fifteen, each carrying from two to five thousand troops. A tank steamer and the cruiser completed the convoy.

The voyage was replete with interesting happenings and conditions. Life preservers were distributed, from which the men were not allowed to separate themselves, and during the last three days of the voyage they had to be worn constantly except when the men slept; daily boat drills were held, the men being instructed as to their positions and duties in case of emergency; not a ray of light was permitted to escape from the vessel at night, so that all port holes were kept closed and no smoking on deck was allowed; target practice by the gunners, the zigzagging evolutions of the vessels, and the signaling were always sources of much interest; submarine scares were daily occurrences and the vessel fairly seethed with rumors; the officers had setting-up exercises on the boat deck at 6:45 A. M. daily; and morning and afternoon physical inspections, music and letter writing helped to pass the time. There were all varieties of weather, but on the whole the atmospheric conditions were favorable and the sea comparatively smooth. Many of the men were more or less afflicted with mal-de-mer and some of them even "cursed the day they were born." The mess might have been improved, but the fact that the worms in the prunes were cooked rendered them innocuous, and the fresh stewed tripe was nourishing though nauseating.

On the afternoon of the fifteenth of July the Pueblo circled the convoy, each vessel displaying its flag, and then disappeared on the horizon. Eight destroyers picked up the convoy during the night, and in the early morning of the seventeenth the rugged coast of "Bonny Scotland" was clearly seen in the distance. Land was visible during the entire day as the fleet proceeded southward, and minesweepers, destroyers, aeroplanes and a dirigible acted as guardians. Late in the afternoon the convoy approached Liverpool, and on a multitude of crafts and all along the shores the crowds cheered and waved; bells rang, whistles blew, and every evidence of a hearty welcome was given. The transport came to anchor at 8:10 o'clock, and the songs and cheers of the troops on board mingled with the acclaims of those on all sides.

The vessel docked at 8:20 o'clock the next morning, and at 9:30 the Command disembarked. The day was spent in the warehouse on the pier, some of the men making brief visits into the city between showers. Late in the afternoon the Unit marched to the station of the London and Northeastern R. R. and entrained. At 7:25 o'clock the next stage of the journey was begun, the train passing through a charming section of England. The fine gardens, green fields, rolling hills, peaceful villages, and orderly farms looked good to a travel-worn crowd which had been twelve days on the ocean.

At five o'clock in the morning of the nineteenth Southampton was reached and a march of three miles brought the Command to the famous "Rest Camp." Ye Gods! what memories that name calls up; the enlisted men standing around all day in the rain waiting to be assigned to quarters; the foul smelling blankets, the miserable mess, the almost continuously weeping skies, and,—well, everything. However, there were some compensations during the four days' sojourn at Southampton, because opportunities were given for shopping; for seeing many typically English houses, gardens, shows, and things of historic interest; and for getting a brief glimpse of English life. But it was a joyous moment when the order to proceed was received, and without regrets, the Unit marched to the pier on the afternoon of the twenty-second of July. The channel steamer Viper was boarded, and, in company with other detachments which crowded the craft to its maximum capacity, the men settled down to make themselves as comfortable as their cramped and unclean accommodations would permit.

The boat left Southampton at 7:40 o'clock, taking its position with other vessels in the shelter of the Isle of Wight. At 9:20 the dash for the French coast began. What a night! Nobody will ever forget the furious speed of the steamer and the awful lurches as the course was suddenly changed; the tempest of rain and wind, and the impenetrable darkness; the flashing signals of the destroyers; the groans and agonized exertions of the sick; the decks, stairways, and rooms occupied by soldiers sitting, lying, standing in all possible postures, and slippery with the offerings to Neptune; and the suspense! At 2:45 A. M. land was sighted, and at five o'clock La Havre was reached. At 8:30 the men disembarked and marched through the city and up the long hill to the camp, where tents were assigned and preparations made for a temporary stay. The weeping heavens and the close proximity to a sizeable cemetery were not especially conducive to a cheerful atmosphere, but the men made the best of their cheerless quarters in the bare tents, and each endeavored to be philosophical while occupying the few inches of space allotted to him.

At two o'clock the next morning the Unit was aroused. Mess was eaten by the light of a glorious moon, baggage was packed and transported, and the railroad station was reached after a brisk march in the crisp air and the growing light of a gorgeous sunrise.

At seven fifteen o'clock the final stage of the journey was begun, the men and their belongings being crowded into the dirty cars in a fearsome manner.

The trip from La Havre to Pouques-les-Eaux will always be remembered as one of the "events" in the history of Forty-Four. So cramped was the space in the compartments that in at least two instances the racks over the seats intended for hand baggage were utilized as sleeping quarters, and in several cases men were temporarily lost amidst the pieces of luggage piled promiscuously on the floors of the cars. Rations for forty hours were issued before leaving La Havre, and the efforts of the men to make equitable divisions of them with reference to the number of meals and the number of mouths were exciting. From 1:15 A. M. to 4:30 P. M. of the twenty-fifth the train reposed undisturbed in the freight yard at Villeneuve, the monotony of the pause being occasionally relieved by the demands of the men for certain privileges, forcibly expressed individually or in unison.

The train came to a jerky stop at the little station of Pouques-les-Eaux at 3:15 A. M. of Friday, the twenty-sixth of July, and the cars containing the members of Base Hospital Forty-Four and their baggage were backed onto a siding and left. In the morning the men finished their forty-hour rations, and marched to their quarters. The long journey was ended. Through the dangers and discomforts on land and sea the Unit had come unharmed. Six men had been left on the way as a result of sickness, quarantine, or failure to make connections, but the remainder had arrived full of "pep."

2. DOUBLE TIME!

Pouques-les-Eaux is a typically French town of about eighteen hundred inhabitants situated near the geographical centre of France. It is about two miles from the Loire River and is surrounded by a charmingly picturesque rolling country chiefly occupied by farms and vineyards. Nevers, where the headquarters of the Intermediate Section were located, is about five miles distant, and the great hospital centre at Mesves, of which the Pouques hospital was to be a unit, was about twelve miles in the opposite direction. Pouques is famous for its mineral springs, of which the St. Leger is the most renowned, and during the summer season has been for many years a popular resort for people desiring to "take the cure." There are a number of fine residences in and near the town occupied during the warm weather by well-to-do Parisians; and several hotels catering to the summer trade, of varying sizes and grades, constitute the chief industry of this peaceful village. The Rue Nationale forms the main street, and a quaint old church occupies a central location. There are numerous small shops and wine stores, and several winding lanes with characteristic houses and gardens.

The outbreak of the war put an end to the summer resort business, and some of the hotels had been used by the French for hospital purposes. With the advent of the United States into the war, arrangements were made for the leasing of about twenty buildings to the Government to use as a hospital for the care of American soldiers. The Hotel Splendid with its fine grounds, chalet, casino, tennis courts, gymnasium, and baths, constituted the centre of the plant; and the Hotels du Parc, Grand, and St. Leger, and the Villas du Chalet, Bert, de France, Caston, Mt. Guivre, and Bellevue, together with the New Marie, the Maison Clement, and two private residences completed the property to be occupied. The buildings varied in size from capacities of thirty-five to three hundred, with two or three not suitable for patients; in age from a comparatively recent time to an ancient period; and in condition, from a fairly well built and well preserved building to a time worn and neglected structure. Temporarily the officers were quartered in the chalet on the grounds of the Hotel Splendid, and the detachment men in the Mairie, Villa de France and Villa Bert.

The gigantic task of cleaning, altering and equipping these buildings for hospital purposes was presented to Forty-Four; but as there was to be a period of waiting for supplies to arrive, it was determined that all men not needed for the preliminary work, should be sent to Mesves to assist in the development of the hospital property in process of construction there. On the day following the arrival of the Unit in Pougues, twenty-nine officers and one hundred and fifty enlisted men packed their belongings and marched over the road to Mesves. Mon Dieu, what a day of gloom! It had been announced that the organization would probably be broken up, and many of the men felt that this was the beginning of the end; so with sinking hearts and dismal forebodings they toilsomely traversed the twenty kilometers, with the heavens sympathetically pouring out a profusion of tears. Their fears proved groundless, however, for after four days of road-building and discomforts, all but ten of the number returned to Pougues on trucks.

Freight began to arrive shortly and a period of intense activity ensued. Beds were set up in all available places; furniture was moved about and rearranged in a weird fashion; carpenters, electricians, plumbers, and painters ripped, tore, scraped, altered, and rebuilt the interiors of buildings, while details of detachment men and civilian employes scrubbed and cleaned; there was an almost constant transportation of supplies from the freight cars to the quartermaster's storehouse and the medical supply depot, and from there to the various buildings of the Unit; preparations were made to successfully accomplish the tremendous task of feeding the multitudes; and elaborate plans for the medical and surgical administration of the hospital were developed. The laboratory, dental, eye, ear, nose and throat, and the X-ray departments were organized and rapidly put in condition for work. Everybody was busy and happy, and except for a few minor ailments, and a bumped head due to a fall from a second story bunk during a troubled sleep, all were in good health.

The French people were very cordial, and many of the members of the Unit soon formed pleasant friendships. Quite a proportion of the men began an intensive study of the language, assisted by volunteer and professional teachers, and aided and abetted by the townspeople. Officers and enlisted men were invited to the homes of the "leading citizens," and the best was none too good for Forty-Four. On August fourth a special patriotic service was held in the local church, and many of the members of the Unit accepted the invitation to attend. Certain local pastimes were indulged in by many, and Mademoiselles Vin Blanc and Vin Rouge became especially popular.

With the exception of a few days, the weather was delightful all through August and September; and the rainy season did not develop in earnest until the latter part of October. The long days of sunshine and the cool nights made a wonderful combination for comfort, and the charming country and quaint villages easily accessible by walking or bicycling, were sources of constant delight. It certainly seemed that Forty-Four had "landed on its feet."

The Red Cross representative, Capt. Vaill, arrived on the twenty-ninth of July and immediately formulated plans for the entertainment and comfort of the men of the Unit and of the prospective patients. Much might be said about the work of the Red Cross in connection with the hospital, and it is needless to state that the development of the canteen and "hut," the long list of band concerts, entertainments, "movies," dances, "teas," and other social events, and the distribution of vast amounts of clothing, toilet articles, sweets, "smokes," reading matter, and writing material went far toward making life worth living for all.

Capt. Vaill was ably assisted in his work by Mrs. Glavis and Miss Dougherty.

On the fourth of August the nurses and women secretaries arrived. The Nurse Corps had been mobilized in New York, and on the fourteenth of July, Mrs. Flash, with ninety-eight nurses and six secretaries left for France. After a prolonged and somewhat strenuous trip they arrived in Paris, where twenty-four nurses were detached and detailed for special service. The remainder reached Pouques safely, and after a rest of twenty-four hours the nurses were divided into two groups of thirty-seven each, one detachment going to Mars and the other to Mesves for temporary duty. The latter group returned to Pouques on the seventeenth of August and remained during the period of activity of the hospital.

3. CHARGE!

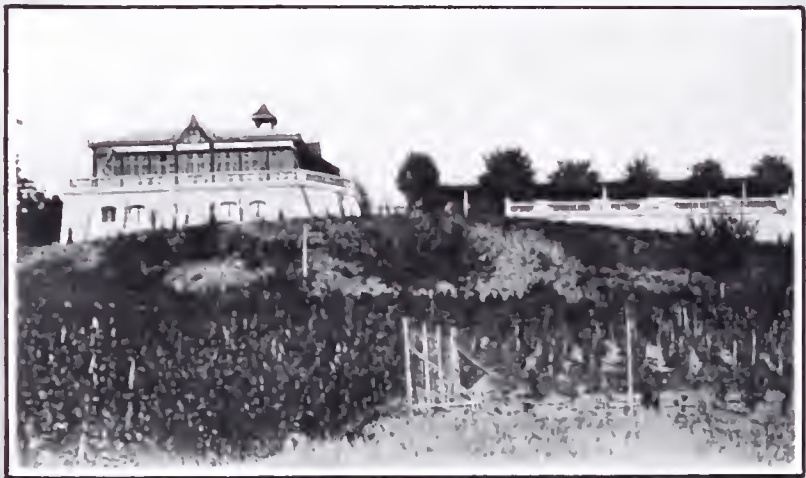

Preliminary arrangements having been completed and plans of action thoroughly discussed, active skirmishing in the awful Battle of Pouques began on the tenth of August when one hundred and fifty-nine patients, convalescent from injuries and sickness, arrived in trucks from Mesves. They were quartered in the Grand, and St. Leger, and were followed by other contingents of varying sizes at frequent intervals. These men were practically all ambulatory, and their chief cry was, "When do we eat?" With the arrival of several officer patients, the first cases of serious injuries and sickness were received. They were at first placed in the du Chalet but were subsequently moved to the Splendid. The first operation was performed on the twenty-third of August. The Mt. Guivre was opened on the twenty-sixth, and the other buildings were occupied in rapid succession as the number of patients increased.

During the early days there was much uncertainty as to the character of the cases which were to be assigned to Forty-Four. According to official and semiofficial reports, the hospital was to be devoted exclusively to surgical patients, to medical patients, to all kinds of patients, to convalescent patients, to neurological patients, to orthopaedic patients, or to heart and lungs patients. As finally determined, the cases turned over to the Unit were largely officers and convalescent enlisted men, the major portion of them being sent by train or truck from the Mesves centre.

The plan which was early developed, was to segregate the surgical cases in the Splendid and Casino, and the acute medical cases in the du Parc, the other buildings to be occupied by convalescent patients. The Mt. Guivre was reserved for recovered cases, and at first the men were here "hardened up" and prepared for the hike to the Convalescent Camp at Bulcy. The orthopaedic cases were largely cared for at the du Chalet. The Grand was used as a clearing house, quite a proportion of the patients arriving being received at this building; and the mess for the patients in several buildings and for the members of the detachment was handled here. This original plan was substantially followed during the period of activity of the hospital, although subsequently the Casino, Aviat and the du Parc were reserved exclusively for officer patients. The administrative offices were located in the Splendid and the Janicot was occupied as quarters for some of the officers of Forty-Four.

Two surgical teams were sent to Mesves for temporary duty on the fifteenth of August, the members being Major Chandler, Captains Wiggin and Thomas, and Lieutenants Skirball, Green and Rowell. Major Chandler, Captain Thomas and Lieutenant Green returned on the thirty-first. On the third of September two teams, composed of Majors Wesselhoeft and Chandler, Captain Thomas and Lieutenant Green, with six nurses and four enlisted men went to the advanced zone for duty in evacuation hospitals, remaining for about six weeks. Several other officers and a number of the enlisted men and nurses were transferred to Mesves or elsewhere for special duty or instruction, most of them eventually returning to the Unit.

The engagements which occurred in this early stage of the famous battle were to quite an extent of a social nature. The leading citizens entertained, the officers entertained, the nurses entertained, the Red Cross entertained; in short, this was an entertaining period in the history of Forty-Four. The patients were well cared for, but as their chief need was entertainment, the efforts of the members of the personnel to make them happy were considered "in line of duty." The detachment men developed an excellent quartet and orchestra which materially assisted in the solution of the amusement problem. Even the proletariat caught the infection, for the calling out of the Class of 1920 on the nineteenth of September, was celebrated in a manner which exhausted the supply of liquid refreshments in the town early in the afternoon, and rendered the entire populace "mellow."

Meanwhile endless supplies of equipment were arriving, and the feeble transportation facilities assigned to the hospital were being taxed to their utmost capacity to keep the procession moving. The men worked night and day loading and unloading, and the S.O.S. of the organization was constantly "on the job."

Early in September the second phase in the great struggle was begun, with the arrival of orders to enlarge the capacity of the hospital from twelve hundred to seventeen hundred and fifty, tout de suite. Cots were set up in attics, hallways, and sheds; beds were crowded into wards already normally full; mattresses were laid on unoccupied floor spaces; and the detachment men were squeezed into attics and dugouts.

On the fourteenth of September the first sharp encounter occurred, when ten truck loads of convalescent patients arrived from Mesves in the evening, with orders to return with three hundred other convalescent cases, making a shift of about six hundred men. The commanding officer of the Centre headed the onslaught in person. A description of the engagement had best be omitted, but it may be stated that the display of vocal pyrotechnics was of a startling and picturesque character, and that the casualties on the side of Forty-Four were rather heavy. The offensive temporarily lost one truck by ditching.

The crucial period in the Battle of Pouques began on the second of October when a hospital train direct from the front arrived, containing four hundred and fifty-three patients. A very moving period preceded the encounter, the patients already in the hospital being so generally moved about that many of them were not located for days. Elaborate preparations were made for receiving the newcomers, and men, ambulances, trucks, stretchers and blankets were placed in position at the station. After many alarms and a protracted period of waiting, the long hospital train rolled in and the fray began. The three hundred and fifty "sitters" were "toted" or walked to their quarters, and the task of getting out the "liers" on stretchers was rushed. For two hours the awful action progressed, while rail transportation was blocked and the train officials "threw fits." Carefully the poor travel-worn fellows suffering with wounds and sickness of varying degrees were taken from their bunks and transported to the hospital, where doctors, nurses, and orderlies were waiting to do everything possible to help them.

Another hospital train arriving at one o'clock in the morning of the fourth of October delivered forty-eight officers, several of whom were in a desperate condition; and a large aggregation of convalescent patients arrived by train on the fifth.

The hospital was full to overflowing, the daily census showing well over seventeen hundred patients. Many of the men were dangerously sick as a result of wounds or diseases, and a number of deaths occurred. Every member of the Unit was working overtime. To add to the difficulties of the situation a flank attack was launched by an army of deadly influenza germs, and within a few days about a third of the officers, nurses, and detachment men were hors de combat, several of them being desperately ill. Those were trying times and tested the strength and courage of the members of the Forty-Four to the utmost.

It is with profound regret and sorrow that the loss of one of our detachment men at this time is recorded. On the thirteenth of October, Claude I. Parrott, one of the original members of the Unit and a fine young man of great popularity and promise, passed away; and on the fifteenth he was laid to rest in the French cemetery at Nevers. Two men temporarily attached to Forty-Four for duty, George W. Bowker and Henry F. Tattersoll, also died during this epidemic.

With the recovery of the sick members of the personnels and the systematizing of the work of the hospital, a definite routine was gradually established. Patients were rapidly classified by the Disability Board and passed on as ready for duty, for return to the States, or for special treatment; new cases were received, practically all of the convalescent type; and the social activities, which had been for a time neglected, again flourished. The machinery of the organization was running smoothly, and everybody had settled down for a "long pull," when, on the eleventh of November, the ringing of bells, the shrieking of whistles, the displaying of flags, and the shouts of the people proclaimed the signing of the armistice.

It was the announcement of the beginning of the end for the Battle of Pougues.

4. AS YOU WERE!

A period of beaucoup celebrations characterized the cessation of hostilities. The townspeople celebrated in their usual way of promiscuous hugging and kissing, the feminine portion of the community being encouraged in these expressions of joy by the soldiery; the patients celebrated in true American fashion by noise-making in endless variety, the officer patients going "over the top" of Cognac Ridge en masse; and the detachment men and officers of Forty-Four took cognizance of the great event in a manner which caused the natives to "sit up and take notice." The tension under which the men had been working suddenly relaxed. Discipline was slackened, and free expression was given to the relief and joy which all experienced by the realization that, "Fini la Guerre."

The officers developed another reason for jollification at this period. On the tenth of November the first of a series of proposed birthday celebrations was held. The mess hall was profusely decorated, the tables were set in civilized fashion, and there was an excellent "feed"; even menus and a très joli birthday cake were provided, and the occasion was pronounced a great success, including an "after meeting" held at the Janicot. Notwithstanding the fact that three more birthdays occurred in November, and that others came in convenient sequence, the series came to an abrupt end with the famous celebration of Captain Gilbert's natal day on the eighteenth. The preprandial exercises, the stately parades, the oratorical efforts, the touching references to Harvard Square, and the terribly tragic termination of the affair at its most virile period beggar description. Requiescat in pace.

The stream of cases entering the hospital quickly ceased to flow, and the work rapidly decreased in amount; the daily census showed a steady decline in the number of patients, and it became evident that the Battle of Pouques was entering its final stages. Immediately the questions, "What next?" and, "When do we go home?" agitated the members of the personnels, and the rumor-developers began active operations.

During this period most of the officers were granted five-day passes to visit Paris, and a little later many of the enlisted men and nurses received passes to the gay metropolis. Opportunities were given to visit other places of interest, and there was a general atmosphere of relaxation and enjoyment. A special dinner given at this time to the members of the detachment was a "howling success." The "eats" were varied and luscious, there was an atmosphere of good-fellowship, and the entertainment by home talent, consisting of music and speeches was a work of art.

1. TO THE REAR!

The first step in the backward movement of the forces of Quarante-quatre from the famous battleground at Pougues was taken in response to an order received from G. H. Q. directing that the property should be vacated as quickly as possible, and the Unit transferred to Mesves. On the twenty-ninth of November Captain Wiggin and Lieutenant Wood, with fifty enlisted men, retired to the new location and entrenched themselves in Unit Eleven. The new position was the most recent of the units developed at this great hospital centre and consisted of partially constructed buildings of the roughest character located in a vast expanse of mud varying from two inches to two feet in depth. The task of rendering the buildings habitable, constructing walks, and preparing the barracks and wards for personnels and patients was at once undertaken, and the transportation of the vast quantities of supplies was begun. The patients were rapidly evacuated from Pougues and early in December the last of them departed for Mesves.

On the fifteenth of December ten officers and a company of enlisted men took formal possession of Unit Eleven. On the following day four hundred and fifty patients were admitted to the new hospital, all of them having recovered entirely from wounds or illnesses, and awaiting orders to proceed to their commands; and others of the same character arrived subsequently. The nurses moved from Pougues on the twentieth.

Two members of the Unit received special appointments at this time. Mrs. Flash became Chief Nurse of the Centre on the nineteenth of December, and on the twenty-second Captain Catheron assumed the duties of Local Dental Supervisor.

Officers and enlisted men continued to arrive from Pougues as the work of preparing the property at that place for the return to its owners progressed. Leaves of absence were granted to many members of the personnels, and opportunity was thus given for visits to southern and eastern France. It was generally felt that the Unit was spending a brief period at this first way-station on its journey to America, and everybody was full of courage in spite of the discomforts and annoyances of the situation. The rain descended profusely and persistently; roofs leaked; the awful mud necessitated the constant wearing of hip boots; drinking water was scarce and poor; there was no electricity; there was a penetrating chill in the air; and the bully beef, corned Willie, gold fish and other delicacies seemed to have lost their charm.

The holiday season was somewhat dismal in certain respects. Despite the fact that a tremendous States' mail brought many letters and Christmas packages from the folks at home, and that the outlook for a speedy return to America seemed bright, there was a skeleton in the closet—or rather, in the cellar—which materially interfered with the hilarity and joyousness which would supposedly have been in evidence. The suggestion of the name Du Parc, seemed to produce a marked sensation, and certain brands of liquid refreshment were evidently unpopular. The enfeebled state of health of the mess fund rendered it inadvisable to have a special Christmas dinner, and had it not been for the generosity of the Red Cross, the gloom would have been impenetrable. It was a dry season in more than one respect, and will long be remembered for what didn't happen.

The truth of the persistent rumor that Forty-Four would be one of the first organizations returned to the United States seemed to be confirmed when Evacuation Hospital Twenty-Nine arrived and formally took over the work in Unit Eleven on the eighteenth of January. Drills, hikes, and inspections were at once begun with the purpose of rendering the men fit for the hardships and requirements of a long trip. The completion of the apparently hopeless task of straightening out the property accounts was hastened, and the mess account closed. Base Hospital Forty-Four ceased to functionate as a hospital, and was temporarily attached to Twenty-Nine for quarters and rations.

On the seventeenth of January an order was issued authorizing the men who had served for six months in the A. E. F. to wear service stripes, and the coveted gold ornaments rapidly appeared upon the left coat sleeves of the members of the Unit. On the twenty-sixth of January twenty-seven nurses who had signed up for continued service abroad left for Toul, and two days later the remaining nurses were transferred. Thus ended the official existence of the Nurse Corps of Base Hospital Forty-Four.

Everything seemed to be in readiness for the word which would start the Unit homeward, and orders were expected daily. Instructions were issued to notify the home folks to cease writing, and there was a general atmosphere of expectancy and optimism. To assist in occupying the time a company of the detachment men developed and produced an excellent farce-comedy entitled "Madam S. O. L." which was played in the several Red Cross huts in the Centre and was pronounced a great success by all. Efforts by the entertainment authorities were made to induce the men to go on the circuit of the A. E. F. camps, but the desire to get home was stronger than the wish to remain indefinitely in France, and the offer was declined. "Julius Caesar" was staged a little later, and was a fun-maker for the entire Centre. Basketball, boxing, baseball, and other sports helped to pass many hours pleasantly, and some of the men took advantage of the educational courses which were conducted. These various activities, in addition to the numerous details required to carry on the work of the Unit, and to comply with the demands of the camp headquarters, kept all the men actively employed.

2. ROUTE STEP!

Forty-Four was doomed to another heart-breaking period in its history. Day after day passed and no word arrived from the "Great Unknown." Rumors began to circulate that the Unit had been dropped from the sailing list, and unexpected difficulties with the property accounts developed. On the fourth of February Lt. Col. Wilds was transferred to Brest, Lt. Col. Wesselhoeft becoming the commanding officer of the Unit, and thus was inaugurated a series of transfers of officers and detachment men to all sections of the A. E. F. for duty. Dire disaster seemed to threaten, and it looked as though the organization was to be completely broken up and the members retained indefinitely in France. The only hope was that orders to go home might be received, thus checking the process of dissolution.

Deep, dense, dreadful gloom prevailed as the officers and men were gradually taken away, and an apparent impasse in the medical property situation developed; and distress turned to despair when Evacuation Hospital Twenty-Nine, which had taken over the work of Forty-Four so that it could depart for America left for Germany on the twenty-second of February. The morale of the Unit utterly succumbed and was formally buried by the detachment men with appropriate ceremonies consisting of sad music, a solemn funeral procession and impressive committal services. The only redeeming feature of this period of profound depression was that opportunities were given to most of the officers and men to visit Paris, the battlegrounds, and the leave areas in eastern and southern France.

On the seventeenth of February, the death of Elmer R. Bolinder, the second member of the enlisted personnel to pass away, occurred. Sergeant Bolinder had been transferred from Forty-Four a few days prior to his illness, but had not changed his quarters and was still counted a member of the Unit. He was a graduate of the Harvard Dental School and had done exceptionally fine work in the dental department of the hospital. Immediately following his return from a delightful period spent at the Nice leave area he developed meningitis and died within three days. Notification that his commission as First Lieutenant had been granted as a result of examinations successfully passed, was received on the day before his death. He was buried in the American cemetery at Mesves on the eighteenth, the entire membership of the Unit marching to the grave behind the flag-draped casket and witnessing the military burial. A memorial service was held on the twenty-third at the Red Cross hut. Sergt. Bolinder will always be remembered as one of the most faithful, popular, and successful members of the organization.

Another especially sad occurrence at this period was the death of Miss Marion H. Peck on the seventeenth of February. Miss Peck was a member of the non-enlisted personnel of Forty-Four and served as dietitian during the period of activity of the hospital. She had been granted a discharge from the service to resume her civilian work, and was on her way home when she was stricken with pneumonia, in Paris, and passed away after a brief illness.

The first anniversary of the mobilization of the enlisted personnel of Base Hospital Forty-Four was celebrated on the tenth of March. The Red Cross hut was beautifully decorated and the mess department served a banquet which was the "last word" in the culinary art. Speechmaking, music, and original "stunts" by members of the Unit contributed to render the occasion an unqualified success.

The paper work and property accounts of the organization were finally completed, the proper releases obtained, and everything was in readiness for the final move. On the seventeenth of March orders for the Unit to proceed to Brest arrived. There was an instantaneous resurrection of the erstwhile defunct morale of the outfit, and everybody worked willingly and industriously at policing, packing, paper work, and property adjustments. The Unit had at last reached the end of the long and trying waiting period, and everybody smiled.

Only one thing occurred to modify the happiness of the men at this time, the sudden illness and death of Harold R. Blake, the third of the enlisted men to make the supreme sacrifice. Corporal Blake died on the nineteenth of March after a few days illness with meningitis, and was buried on the twentieth in the American cemetery at Mesves. He had been a most conscientious, faithful and valuable worker in the Registrar's department of the hospital and was beloved and respected by every member of the Unit.

At three o'clock in the morning of March twentieth a hasty mess was consumed and the "last things" were done. In company with two other units, Base Hospital Fifty and Base Hospital Seventy-Two, the Command marched to the Mesves station and entrained, and at seven thirty o'clock the journey to America was begun. Cars containing two other hospital units were attached to the train at Bourges, making a train of thirty-eight coaches.

Much might be said about the discomfort and annoyances of the trip to Brest; the long delays; the filthy cars; the messing difficulties; the penetrating cold; and the crowded conditions. But ca ne fait rien now, and everybody could be cheerful; the men were HOMEWARD BOUND!

Brest was reached at noon on the twenty-second, and the beckoning Atlantic with the waiting vessels in the harbor looked good to the travel worn veterans of Forty-Four. The march of three and a half miles to Camp Pontanezen was accomplished after a standup mess on the pier, and the Unit was billeted in Section Five.

The two weeks spent in this demobilization camp were interesting in many ways. Every fifth day the men were "deloused"; work details were furnished to all parts of the camp for various duties; entertainment was provided in numerous huts; and everything was done in a surprisingly systematic manner. The method of espionage carried out in the camp and the reputed practice of detaining organizations and individuals not conforming to certain military standards, kept the members of the Unit up to the highest degree of efficiency; for the predominant desire in the mind of each was to get home quickly. Of the thirty-five fair days said to be due in this section annually, five were enjoyed during the sojourn of Forty-Four, the remainder of the period being devoted to a succession of clouds, fogs, mists, and torrential rains.

The order to bid good-by to "Sunny France" was forthcoming on the sixth of April, and on the seventh, nine officers and one hundred and fifty-three men, comprising the remains of Base Hospital Forty-Four, marched to Pier Five and were lightered out to the Graf Waldersee, which was boarded at 2:30 o'clock. At 6:30 o'clock the vessel began to move, and as the men watched the receding French shore, their minds were full of thankfulness that their period of enforced tenancy of this war-worn section of the earth had ended, and that they were on the last lap of the long journey to their own country—"God's country."

The voyage was not one continual round of pleasure. The Graf Waldersee was undertaking her first trip to America since the armistice, and was not in the condition usually expected of a palatial transatlantic liner. She "made haste slowly"; she had been stripped of most of her decorations and movable equipment before being leased to the United States government; she was dirty and out of repair; and her facilities for preparing food were entirely inadequate. But all the discomforts of the voyage were endured with a commendable degree of fortitude, and the weather conditions were fortunately generally propitious. Things might have been worse.

At five o'clock in the morning of April twentieth, Easter Sunday, a pilot boat came alongside the vessel and a pilot climbed aboard; and a little later the Statue of Liberty loomed out of the morning mists. Cheer upon cheer rose from the soldiers on the ship, and these were answered by the welcoming shouts of those who had come down the harbor to greet the returning troops. Bands played stirring airs, and eager relatives on the harbor crafts recognized their loved ones among the soldiers on board and gave vent to their emotions by wild gesticulations, tears, and a bombardment of their heroes with fruit and candy.

The Graf Waldersee docked at 10:30 o'clock, and by a strange coincidence, forty-three of the original Forty-Four nurses, in charge of Capt. Belding, arrived on the Zeppelin and landed at the same pier at about the same time. A real American mess was served, the chief features of which were "hot-dogs," pie and apples; and the men did justice to these long absent delicacies by consuming "seconds" liberally.

More than nine months had elapsed since the Unit left New York—months crowded with varied experiences; but as the men stepped again upon American soil and looked about at the familiar sights, everything was forgotten in the supreme joy of realizing that they were "back home."

3. FALL OUT!

By ferry and train the Unit proceeded to Camp Merritt, New Jersey, which was reached at about two o'clock, and here the process of delousing, final paper work, and disintegration was instituted. Two officers and eighteen men were transferred on the twenty-second for discharge elsewhere, and on the twenty-sixth the remaining members of the Unit traveled to Camp Devens, Mass. Here the multitudinous details connected with the mustering out process were rapidly attended to. Many of the men received calls from relatives and friends, and some had opportunities to visit their homes. The officers were quickly put through the requirements for severing their connection with the military life and were discharged; and on the second day of May the mustering out of the enlisted men occurred.

Thus ended the official existence of Base Hospital Forty-Four. Through sunshine and shadow, pleasures and hardships, dangers and discouragements, hopes and fears, the members had lived and worked in the closest intimacy. Enduring friendships had been formed, unchangeable records of good and bad—mostly good—had been completed; characters had been moulded; indelible impressions of men and methods had been registered; five had made the supreme sacrifice. Through all the feelings of joy and thankfulness that the end had come, the anticipations of the future, and the satisfaction of realizing that the duty was well performed, there ran a sensation of regret that these associations were ended, and that there never again would be a complete assemblage of those who had comprised the personnel of United States Army Base Hospital Forty-Four.

Prefatory Note

TOO little of personalities and too much of generalities must be the criticism of those who served in "Forty-Eight" and who happen in the future to read the following pages. Exactly the opposite will be the opinion of many who did not serve personally with our base hospital.

If a happy medium between the personal and impersonal has been attained, no more can be desired. In any event, it is hoped that this brief history will serve the purpose of a chronicle besides offering a human view of our organization. Thus may our personnel be reminded of their collective achievement and be stimulated to remember their individual troubles and joys.

ORGANIZATION

At the annual meeting of the American Institute of Homeopathy held in Rochester in June, 1917, enthusiasm for war service was very great. The announcement that the Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital had been granted a base hospital by the American Red Cross was received with satisfaction. After a general discussion a motion was offered and unanimously carried that the President appoint a committee of three to offer to the Federal Government the services of three base hospitals, to be raised in New York, Philadelphia and Chicago. Doctors Sawyer and Dearborn of this Committee met with numerous officials in Washington on July 9th and held conferences at later dates in Philadelphia, New York and Chicago. In this connection it is interesting to note the splendid gathering of representative homeopaths called to Washington on July 27th, 1917, at the request of the Chairman of the General Medical Board, Council of National Defense. The Metropolitan Hospital and its unit were represented at this meeting by Doctors Honan, Dearborn, Grant, Rankin, Coleman and Johns.

A special meeting of the Medical Board of the Metropolitan Hospital was called on July 13th at the office of the President, Doctor Rankin, where the formal offer of a base hospital to be raised by the Metropolitan, as well as the written permission of the Commissioner of Public Charities enabling the hospital to tender its services, was forwarded to Colonel J. R. Kean, Red Cross Headquarters, Washington, D. C. This was promptly acknowledged and the Medical Board appointed a base hospital committee, consisting of Doctors Dearborn (Chairman), Benson, Carleton, Coleman, Honan, Howard, McDuffie, Root and Swift, with full power to select the director and principal officers. Ten days later Doctor W. F. Honan, one of the senior surgeons of the Metropolitan Hospital, was elected Director of the unit with Doctors A. R. Grant and F. M. Dearborn as chiefs of the Surgical and Medical sections thereof. While this action was immediately announced to the Director of Military Relief, American Red Cross, Washington, it was only after numerous delays and frequent trips to Washington on the part of Doctor Honan that he finally received his appointment as Director on September 11th, 1917. The formation of the base hospital was authorized on the same date.

The Metropolitan Hospital, having enjoyed a continuous life of forty-two years as a municipal institution and being the largest general hospital in the United States with a maximum capacity of twenty-two hundred beds, naturally had a large attending and interne staff as well as an alumni association composed of nearly four hundred ex-internes. On July 13th a questionnaire was sent out to all these men asking for volunteers to man the war hospital. Altho a great many of the younger men were already in the service, more than a hundred applicants for the various positions responded to the appeal. From this number the official complement of thirty medical and surgical men were selected. Every effort was made to secure an evenly balanced staff, representing all the necessary specialties. At least two-thirds of those chosen were above thirty-five years of age inasmuch as the requirements for a base hospital personnel call for experience in many and varied lines. No less than seven had received previous military training.

A further and pressing work for the Base Hospital Committee was the vital question of raising funds. At the time the original offer was made to the Government, about $33,000 was pledged but it was essential to have at least $110,000. Thus in August, 1917, an active campaign was instituted. Contributions were received from over three hundred individuals, all thru homeopathic physicians of New York City and vicinity and upper New York State. It was thru the patients and friends of Doctors Honan, Benson, Dearborn and Grant that most of the funds were obtained. A large sum was spent by the various Red Cross Chapters and auxiliaries working for our Unit. However, no estimate can be made of the innumerable hours of service given by women connected with these organizations. With the concurrence of the New York County

Red Cross Chapter, a prominent New York lawyer, Mr. George E. Hite, Jr., was appointed Treasurer. It is interesting to note that all this money was raised and administered without the slightest tax on the principal thereof, inasmuch as all the necessary expenditure was generously paid by those engaged in the work. While it is impossible to go into the exact details of the contributions, it is not amiss to mention that the Red Cross Chapters of Rutherford, N. J., and Grafton, Mass., as well as the following auxiliaries of the New York County Red Cross Chapter, No. 29 of the Rutgers Presbyterian Church, No. 215 of the Broadway Presbyterian Church, No. 73 of the Collegiate Reformed Churches of New York City and later our own Base Hospital branch (located in the Hotel Chatham), all worked together to make the necessary surgical dressings and hospital linen and to purchase the sheets, operating room linen, mess linen and the numerous garments needed for a unit. Early in October, Mrs. Agnes McMurrich of the Rutgers Auxiliary was appointed Receiver of Supplies and acted most efficiently in this capacity.

All the equipment was made in October, November and December, packed for shipment and stored in the Manhattan Storage Warehouse Company in New York City, without expense to the Unit. Numerous other gifts of knitted woolen garments were made by groups of women in New York, Stamford, Conn., and Grafton, Mass., a beautiful set of flags was presented by a loyal friend, enough money was subscribed to purchase a professional library for the Unit which was augmented by gifts from various physicians, and Boericke and Tafel generously outfitted the Unit with homeopathic drugs. The New York County Red Cross Chapter, thru its base hospital division assisted in the organization of our Unit notably by referring many applicants for examination in the enlisted personnel and procuring three ambulances of the standard G. M. C. model for our use. It may be stated here that the other gasoline equipment was likewise promised but along with the extra ambulances we were unable to take them to France. Once upon the scene of operations, such equipment as we needed was supposed to be supplied by local authorities in the A. E. F. Naturally, much of the equipment had to be procured from the army supply depots in New York City by specific and direct orders of the War Department.

In late November, 1917, Major W. T. Helmuth was detailed by the War Department to examine and recruit the necessary men for our enlisted personnel. He was ably assisted in this labor by the staffs of the Metropolitan and Flower Hospitals. Thru the courtesy of Doctor Copeland and the authorities of the Flower Hospital, these examinations were held during December in that institution except where it was necessary to go to Utica to examine a large number of local recruits in that city. About three hundred applicants were examined, of whom a hundred and fifty-three passed, were duly enlisted and sworn into the service as members of the Enlisted Men's Reserve, U. S. Army. It is interesting to note that of those accepted, fifty-three came from New York City, sixty-six from other parts of New York State especially in and around Utica, fourteen from New Jersey, ten from Pennsylvania, five from Connecticut, three from Illinois and one each from Ohio and Kentucky. While a majority were in the so-called draft age, quite an appreciable minority were under twenty-one or over thirty-one. The various trades and occupations essential to the successful working of a base hospital were represented in this group. All of the original fifty base hospitals raised by the Red Cross were manned by personnels of superior intelligence. So it was with our Unit. Nearly all were volunteers and as such might be expected to have a large influence upon the future work and success of the Unit.

Another endeavor of the Base Hospital Committee at this time was to select a chief nurse for the Unit and the necessary sixty-five nurses for a base hospital, as then organized. In the course of a few weeks, this number was raised to a hundred. Thru the interest of Miss Agnes Ward, Superintendent of Nurses, Metropolitan Hospital, Miss Helene D. Bengston, a graduate of the Metropolitan and at this time Superintendent of the Coney Island Hospital, Department of Public Charities, was selected for the position of Chief Nurse and her appointment approved by the Red Cross authorities. Inasmuch as over forty graduates of the Metropolitan had already gone into army service, it was necessary for those engaged in the work of selecting nurses to go outside of our hospital and even outside of New York State so that they might acquire the regulation number of graduates from homeopathic institutions. A careful examination of our nurses roster will reveal that many training schools furnished their quota to make up the required hundred. In all that pertained to the welfare of our Unit, Doctor Walter Conley, Superintendent of the Metropolitan Hospital, was vitally interested. In recognition of his help to the Federal Government during the war, Doctor Conley was commissioned Lieut. Col., M. R. C. in 1922.

Naturally the commissioned personnel as originally selected underwent many changes during the winter of 1917-18. No less than eight men who were tentatively chosen had to withdraw because of illness or the press of business affairs, or because the Government needed them in some other capacity. The ranks held by many of the original appointees were notoriously below what was allowed for a base hospital, but in time promotions remedied this defect. As originally planned, the full complement consisted of twenty-two physicians and two dentists. These figures do not include the Commanding Officer, Adjutant, Quartermaster, Mess Officer, Registrar and Chaplain. None of these, with the exception of the last named, were we expected to select. A statistical summary of the physicians enumerated shows that they graduated from the following institutions: New York Homeopathic Medical College, nine; Hahnemann of Philadelphia, seven; Hahnemann of Chicago, two and one each from the Boston University, University of Michigan, New York University and Ohio State University. Thirteen of the number resided in New York State, five in Pennsylvania, two in Illinois, one in Massachusetts and one in Ohio. Twenty of them were members of the American Institute of Homeopathy and only four were in the draft age, all the others being over thirty-one.

It was necessary during this winter of organization to establish among the officers a community of purpose and to outline certain procedures which would result in the development of a working unit, hence it was that a conference was called for January 19th and 20th, 1918. A formal dinner was given by Majors Honan and Dearborn at the Union League Club, New York City, on the evening of the first day of the conference and was attended by nineteen of the officers, the others being unable to get away from their duties. The guests included the members of the Metropolitan Base Hospital Committee, Dean Copeland, the Hon. Bird S. Coler, Commissioner of Public Charities, Major J. B. Griffin, Ass't Division Surgeon at Camp Upton, Major Helmuth, Doctor Conley, Major Alexis Carrel and Captain Dehelley of the French Army (both of whom were then stationed at the Rockefeller Institute). Commissioner Coler presided and proposed the usual toasts, after which Major Honan called upon various speakers who outlined their share in the establishment of the Unit and their interest in the success of the same. It is no exaggeration to say that Major Carrel's remarks about war conditions in France and Captain Dehelley's vivid recital of his own experiences with the French Medical Commission in Roumania will never be forgotten by those fortunate enough to hear them. The following morning the officers of the Unit met in conference at the New York Athletic Club to discuss ways and means essential to the success of the organization. During this session, Major Griffin, who had come especially from Camp Upton to enlighten the officers as to their duties and equipment, spoke for nearly three hours concerning these matters.

During this formative period the number of medical officers was increased to twenty-eight plus two dental officers and six others in the administrative group. A few of the officers were already in active service but the majority did not enter upon real duties until March and April, 1918. They were then ordered to take special courses to fit them for their particular specialties or were directed to proceed to various camps in eastern United States. The balance were ordered to the Port of Embarkation, Hoboken, N. J. After the enlisted personnel had been selected, a few were chosen to serve in civilian hospitals in New York City, mostly in the Hahnemann and Metropolitan Hospitals, in order that their knowledge of medical and surgical technique might have a real foundation.

FORT MCHENRY

Late in February, 1918, Lieut. Thomas F. Davies was ordered to mobilize the enlisted personnel of Base Hospital No. 48 in New York City. Assembling at the National Service Club, opposite the Pennsylvania Station on the morning of March 6th, a hundred and forty-six ununiformed recruits were ready to enter the service of the Government. They left about 1 P. M. and reached U. S. General Hospital No. 2, Ft. McHenry, Md., the same evening. The few men who had not been able to go down with this detachment joined within a few days, thus disposing of the original complement. The misapprehension that we in New York labored under relative to the necessity of a quick response to the orders directing Lieut. Davies to take the detachment to Ft. McHenry, was unfounded. Later it was learned that the men might have been partially equipped and uniformed before leaving New York if the proper interpretation of the order had been possible. Neither the Unit nor its officers had yet acquired that happy frame of mind that reads all orders between the lines and then proceeds to obey them. From a military view point, it was a sorry looking aggregation that left the Pennsylvania Station, with every variety of baggage that it was possible for men to carry, but they all had health and spirits. No mean essentials for the work to come.

From March 6th to June 20th, 1918, was a period of instruction and experience as far as the men of "48" were concerned. A minimum amount of military drill and a maximum of discipline together with all the ramifications of hospital work might be said to comprise the curriculum of this period. Major W. D. Herbert of the Regular Army Medical Corps took command of the Unit on April 2nd and from that time until the date of departure from Ft. McHenry nine other officers joined the Unit. It is also essential to state that the personnel was increased to two hundred enlisted men, hence other applicants were examined in New York and Utica and forwarded to Ft. McHenry. A few were transferred to us from other organizations in the Medical Department and in turn a number of our enlisted men and officers were ordered away from “48” to other services or institutions. At this time the first promotions to the ranks of corporal and sergeant were made and a number of the officers received an advance in rank. All that pertained to military, professional and athletic activities at General Hospital No. 2 were fully participated in by Base Hospital No. 48. The “Trouble Buster,” a weekly newspaper at Ft. McHenry was entirely the product of our Unit and it was a sure forecast that they would do something in this line when they reached France. The machinists, carpenters, barbers, tailors, cooks, chauffeurs, orderlies, technicians and various clerical staffs all had a chance to demonstrate their natural ability and lack of training in things military. There was, however, a great advantage accruing to our Unit from their stay in Ft. McHenry, in that from the very start they had a permanent home for three and a half months in a working military hospital with opportunities for actual service. Naturally it was of reciprocal advantage to General Hospital No. 2 because if they needed any special work to be done, a man or men from “48” was ready to do the job. The weather for the most part was splendid and the men were comfortably lodged in barracks, while the few officers of the Unit present during this period lived in wooden cottages.

Lieut. Col. Purnell commanded at Ft. McHenry and the Unit has reason to be grateful to him for his very appropriate notion of discipline and his willingness to help in all details. It was during this time that Bowle, John Broderick, Edwin Clarke, James Honan, Silvernail and Weinstein received commissions in other branches of the service. Two of these fortunate ones, Lieutenants Broderick and Honan, became Mess Officer and Registrar of “48,” respectively. An elaborate field meet as well as other farewell ceremonies were participated in prior to the departure of the Unit from Ft. McHenry. While the usual rumors were current long before the Unit finally got away, as a whole we were not subject to the same hectic times that many similar organizations enjoyed in other camps. Because of certain defects in our equipment at Ft. McHenry, it was necessary for the Commanding Officer and the Director to make frequent trips to Washington and New York. In this way it was possible for Majors Herbert and Honan to frequently meet officers of the Unit who were stationed elsewhere and to keep in touch with the work that was being carried on by our friends in New York City and by the Base Hospital Committee.

Hiking Party, Officers of Base Hospital No. 48, Roanne, July 1918.

TRAVELING OVERSEAS

It cannot be said that anyone was unhappy to leave Ft. McHenry because it meant that the departure for overseas was imminent. At 10 A. M., June 20th, eleven officers and two hundred and four enlisted men of Base Hospital No. 48 left Baltimore via the Pennsylvania Railroad and arrived at Camp Mills, Long Island, N. Y., at 8 P. M. the same day. This proceeding was per special order No. 209, Headquarters, Eastern Department, dated June 9th, 1918. The trip up from Baltimore was pleasant because of the anticipations and hopes enjoyed by all. In common with the lot of traveling troops in our country there was much spasmodic feeding at every stop. Let it here be said that this temptation to indigestion was overdone in this country and underdone abroad. During the last ten days of June the remainder of the officer personnel reported for active duty, Lieut. Woodmansee being the last to materialize. One of our complement, Lieut. Dessloch, never reported because he had in the meantime been attached elsewhere.

Our Chaplain, Father Walter O'Brien, was unable to sail due to a mix-up in orders and Lieut. Broderick developed pneumonia and was transferred to the base hospital at Camp Mills on July 2nd. To enumerate the other temporary casualties it is only necessary to state that Privates Carretto and Granger were also transferred to the hospital. Private Brady went A. W. O. L. and Sergt. Freedman was transferred to Newport News. Lieut. Broderick and Privates Grauger and Brady eventually rejoined our hospital in France. To offset these losses, Sergeant Rosse was transferred to our Unit from the Medical Research Laboratory at Mineola, N. Y. Thus, of the original complement of thirty-nine officers and two hundred and four enlisted men, the actual number sailing became thirty-six officers and two hundred and one enlisted men. No less than eight of the officers had received their promotion to the next higher grade before leaving Ft. McHenry, and Lieut. Miller received his Captaincy while in Camp Mills. Originally the Unit was housed in tents off the main avenue of the camp but after the first week we moved to Section 3, nearer the entrance and just back of camp headquarters. The food supply was excellent and the preparation by our own cooks even better. Every day fresh excitement was caused by the departure of various units for overseas, including Base Hospitals No. 15, No. 25 and No. 42.

Rumors from sources unmentionable had it that we were to go everywhere from Italy to the North Pole. Many of the officers and men received visitors and members of their families and not a few gifts such as supplies of cigarettes and cigars were left as the result of these excursions. A gift of a hundred and forty-four specially manufactured hypodermic sets were received for officers and nurses and duly packed. It is pathetic to relate that many of the gifts, such as the comforts enjoyed by Major Grant in his tent, had to be left behind and were donated to the permanent camp. Numerous examinations were held to determine the physical fitness of the outfit and on Wednesday, July 3rd, they were finally passed as perfect. The discipline of the entire personnel at this time was exceptional but nevertheless, three cases of "cooties" were found July 1st and energetically exterminated. A detail of interest relates to the very special charge of Corporal Clifford, our bunny Rhinelander and his preservation for a sad fate overseas. This animal was our real mascot and much esteemed. It may be noted that extra and useful equipment, such as officers' revolvers were procured and the necessary initialing of all baggage was duly attended to in these last few days. Everyone who presumed that he had the slightest excuse, attempted to get some leave.

On the morning of July 4th the headquarters' and officers' heavy baggage was collected by a Quartermaster truck and taken to the Clinton Avenue station to be guarded by Lieut. Chase and a detail of eight men. After a delay of some hours they loaded the duffle and sped on their way to the boat. It is recorded that there were eighty-four pieces of officers' hand baggage packed at the last moment in an itinerant Ford which had been hired by some thoughtful officer. Included in this lot were thirty-six of those elaborate bathing suits which were supposed to keep one alive even after the occupant had been in the ocean many hours. At 10 A. M. on our Country's natal day, Base Hospital No. 48, minus the detail referred to, left for the station in columns of fours. A Sanitary Train and Trench Motor Battery were also along. Leaving the Clinton Avenue station at 11 A. M. we arrived at Long Island City where a ferry boat traveled down the East River around the Battery and up the Hudson to Pier 54. This trip of forty minutes was enlivened by the noteworthy and elevating singing of the enlisted men. Eventually the S.S. "Aquitania," a Cunard liner of huge size and recent vintage, was boarded at 3:30 P. M. Lunch had been eaten all the way from Camp Mills to the boat but on the dock the women of the Canteen Service of the Red Cross served additional "feeds" and handed out post cards announcing our safe arrival, a somewhat premature precaution it seemed to all. Both officers and men boarded from the second floor and soon had made themselves completely at home. This beautiful day was marred only by the physical effort necessary to carry individual baggage. It is anticipated that anyone reading this will know that every officer who had a huge bag has regretted it to this day. Only those who enjoyed mental responsibilities had details to carry some of their kit. Fortunately the spiral stairs of the dock were not used and the lift was a welcome succor.

Our first official meal at 6:30 P.M. on the ship augured good food, not wastefully distributed but of fair variety. The enlisted men had the first class salon because it was more roomy, while the officers dined in the second class in two messes. The rooms, many with private baths, were splendid and it can be said that every officer was more than pleased with his home for the sea trip. The "Aquitania," the largest commercial liner in service, was built in 1914 with tonnage of 45,600, length 901 ft. and breadth 97 ft. She carried a crew of eight hundred and about sixty-two hundred troops. Major General Hodges of the 76th Division was in command with the 151st Brigade Headquarters, 302nd Infantry, two batteries of the 111th Field Artillery, 104th Sanitary Train, 104th Trench Motor Battery, No. 1 Mobile Operating Unit, a special laboratory detachment, the nurses of Base Hospital No. 46 plus fifty others for the mobile group, some casual officers and men as well as ourselves. There were probably three hundred officers aboard of whom nearly half were medical. Colonel Monereif was the senior medical officer while our C. O., Lieut. Col. Herbert, was appointed Sanitary Inspector of troops. Lieutenants DeTuneq and Robertson were detailed to help look after the Field Artillery. The ship's hospital contained forty-five beds as well as a contagious ward of fifteen beds and was placed under the care of Base Hospital No. 48. Regular details of our enlisted men and the nurses of Base Hospital No. 46 officiated all through the trip. Five each of our medical and surgical officers, one dentist, Captain Leighton, and the Registrar, Lieut. Honan, comprised the officer personnel for this hospital service which was light, varying from four to twenty-six patients daily. The first operation was aspiration of the knee joint, performed by Captains Reynolds and White on July 5th. An acute appendix was operated by Major Grant on July 9th without interrupting the course of the vessel. Just before the end of the trip a few cases of measles developed and it was necessary to quarantine these as well as some contacts. Inasmuch as the entire trip was pleasant with only slight showers to mar the weather, sea sickness was practically absent. In a vessel of this size the zigzag course pursued, inasmuch as we were not in convoy nor protected by any war vessels, was no hindrance to the comfort of any aboard.

While it might be interesting to dwell in detail upon the occurrences of this most satisfactory cruise, it will suffice to say that most of the passengers were quite oblivious of danger and enjoyed themselves as much as their official duties would permit. Naturally no lights were allowed after sundown, in fact no one was even permitted to smoke on deck. It was noticeable, however, that the ship's officers did not take this precaution probably because they felt that the ends of their cigarettes and cigars were not visible to the undersea Germans. Setting-up exercises were regularly held for officers and men and boat drills were frequent. Lectures on the proper interpretation of the Manual of the Army Medical Corps were indulged in to the joy of everyone. It was not intended that time should be wasted and about the only leisure that anyone had was when wrapped in the arms of Morpheus. As many of Base Hospital No. 48 had had a strenuous time prior to their sailing, the trip across was indeed a rest. The usual concert and entertainment was held Tuesday evening with a collection for the worthy objects usually exploited on shipboard. The enlisted men had movies and boxing matches in which Base Hospital No. 48 was ably represented by Sergeant Hallam as a fighter.

Our departure from the United States and approach to England were noteworthy because of the ample protection afforded in each event. We left the dock New York City, exactly at 3:21 P. M. July 5th and Ambrose Light was passed at 5:26 P. M. While there was a good deal of whistle blowing and waving of hands as the boat went down the river, everyone was ordered to quarters before reaching the Battery and only allowed out again after reaching the Narrows. Forward where four six inch guns were, a gun pointer of the British Navy was stationed, assisted by a detail of American artillerymen. There were also four similar guns at the stern. On the way out we passed a sausage balloon and submarine chasers. A dirigible hovered over us at the harbor entrance as well as two hydroplanes which accompanied our course for at least ten miles off shore. At the Ambrose Lightship, six destroyers attached themselves to us and these beautiful camouflaged creations of cubist design stayed with us until midnight. Nearing the end of our journey, Thursday, July 11th, at 10 A. M., four United States destroyers were picked up off starboard and within an hour were arranged two on each side of us. Everyone was glad to see this evidence of Uncle Sam's Navy because of the comfy feeling engendered. About 5 P. M. a fifth destroyer came up off the southwest corner of Ireland which was now distinctly visible. The mental atmosphere of the few that were depressed was now much improved and some gaiety was visible even among the enlisted men far down below. At 8 A. M., Friday, July 12th, Wales was plainly discernible to the right and a dirigible, No. 51, joined to accompany us up the Irish Sea, which was as smooth as a mill pond. Steamers, trawlers and sailing ships were much in evidence. The destroyers were still with us and likewise a mine sweeper ahead. The Bar Light was reached at 11:45 A. M. and a pilot came on board at noon going up the Mersey to Liverpool on our final lap. At the Light the destroyers and No. 51 left our ship while dirigibles No. 34 and No. 35 kept tabs on us effectually and came very near overhead while we maneuvered for the dock. The 302nd Infantry was landed shortly after 2 P. M. and thereafter the troops went ashore at regular intervals but Base Hospital No. 48 did not leave her satisfactory quarters until after supper and then departed by the London and Northwest Railroad at 10:30 P. M. for our two hundred mile trip to the South of England.

Despite the fact that it was now night, very few slept but managed to catch glimpses of ghostly scenery as shown by various manufacturing plants at work with double shifts, day and night. What sleeping was enjoyed on this trip was in the sitting posture but it was a splendid introduction to what was to come. In the early morning the beautiful countryside of South England was much appreciated by everyone and the names of the towns were so familiar that many thought they were back in our own New England. The remains of our twenty-four hours rations issued on ship were eaten at the usual odd intervals indulged in by troops in transit, with the result that only those cautious ones known to all outfits had anything left when we reached Southampton. About 8 A. M., July 13th, the march was taken up to the rest camp, three miles north of Southampton. This was a rapid performance without a halt, demonstrating the lack of military knowledge enjoyed by the officers in charge. More than one individual dropped out because of heat or mental prostration, it being difficult to diagnose the exact cause. After the usual poor breakfast served in these camps, sleep was suggested on mattresses for a few hours. The camp was prettily located with splendid trees about and supplied with Y. M. C. A. and Red Cross tents. However, these were principally famous because of their lack of tobacco and sweets. A few of the officers and men were able to go to town and make such purchases as a civilian larder afforded. It was necessary to get a special permit from the town commandant to procure two large war cakes for Major Dearborn's birthday. Lieut. Col. Honan, Major Grant and Captain Reynolds managed to get a game of golf, which was the first of many attempts that these ardent enthusiasts made during their service abroad. After a travel ration of two sandwiches of jam and war bread had been issued, the outfit marched four miles back through town saying good-bye to the various children who seemed the only ones interested. Plenty of able bodied men were indulging in sports on the play ground in the center of the town as we passed at 3:30 P. M., but inasmuch as all parts of England were filled with convalescent and wounded soldiers it is possible that these games were a therapeutic attempt.

Shortly after 7 P. M., July 13th, the S.S. "Caesarea," a small Channel steamer, was boarded and we sailed for Havre with another troop ship. It was still daylight at 9:15 P. M. as we passed the Isle of Wight on the right. Plenty of shipping lay outside of the net line guarded by destroyers, two of which left their anchorage to convoy us. Seaplanes were abundant in all directions. We anchored at the head of Spithead for a few minutes and then proceeded on our way for a relatively smooth passage. This was the only thing that prevented much seasickness inasmuch as the boat was jammed as tight as may be imagined. While the officers had staterooms or bunks, most of the men found it convenient to wedge themselves in after the manner of sardines. On France's birthday, July 14th, at 3:30 A. M. we docked at Havre. It was raining and chilly and the much advertised birthday cakes of the previous day were consumed for breakfast along with something called coffee. At 7:30 we disembarked and started on a four mile hike to the American Rest Camp of Sanvic, outside of the city and beautifully situated on a promontory jutting into the sea. It rained off and on all through this day but it cannot be said that our happiness at being in France was dampened thereby. The march to and from the camp was accompanied by singing and whistling and at one point an American band played us on just about at the psychological moment when everyone was well worn out. A few fortunate ones had the opportunity to see well-built Havre and to enjoy the celebrations staged on this day. Inasmuch as our enlisted force had their entire equipment with them, they were able to find comparative comfort in the rest camp but the officers, who had nothing, spent an unhappy night on wooden floors. This was made all the more attractive by a certain Captain's loud and continuous snoring.

It would seem that July 15th was mainly devoted on the part of everyone to getting a good meal. In the main these efforts succeeded and before we departed at 11:45 that evening for our destination at Roanne, nearly everything in sight was purchased so that it may be said that the two days emergency ration just issued was augmented to such a degree that the trip was hardly a starvation jaunt. Of the journey that started late July 15th and ended at Roanne at 11:30 A. M., July 18th, this much can be said: it was a distinct novelty to a great majority of Base Hospital No. 48. The pleasant French countryside, the old towns, the many troop trains of soldiers going to the Front, convoys of wounded, sick and ticket of leave men returning, not to mention the frantic efforts on the part of everyone to stretch their legs on the least excuse, all contributed to keep one interested. We were far better accommodated than were many of the Combat Troops inasmuch as six officers were allotted to a compartment and eight men to a box of like dimensions. The famous cars labeled "Hommes—36-40. Chevaux—8." were in evidence everywhere and we were to become well acquainted with these before our tour in France ended. After following the Seine to Poissy we started an encircling movement about Paris, passing St. Cyr and Versailles to Juvisy. At the last mentioned place we were held up for various reasons for hours. Being only six miles from the center of Paris we were able to see the Eiffel Tower and other familiar objects.

An air raid over the city was heralded by the sirens which blew for twenty minutes and later "all clear" was sounded. Some isolated cannon shots heard during this time were our first introduction to real war. Our second concrete evidence of the same was numerous German prisoners, husky looking chaps, working in the railroad yards and apparently enjoying their lot.

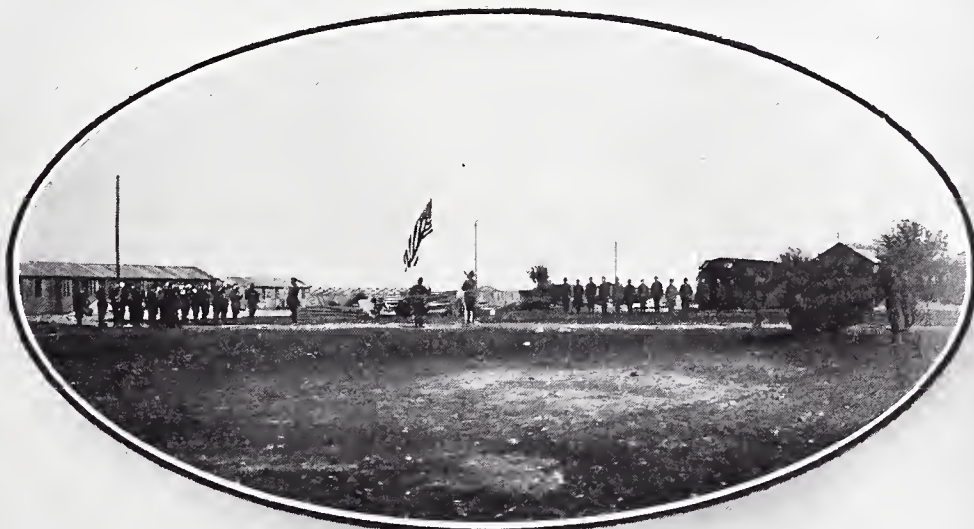

Our train had been shifted and reshifted until at last Base Hospital No. 48 occupied all the remaining coaches, two being for the officers, six for the men and two for baggage. Nevers, which we were to know well later on, was passed during the night and at 6 A. M. Thursday we all awoke at Moulins. Here were many evidences of the air raids but much new building, with factories and camps all about. Following the Allier River after leaving Nevers we crossed a beautiful hilly plateau by La Pallice to Roanne, after three nights and two and a half days travel. We were informed sometime afterward that it had been the intention of the Mayor and authorities of this thriving manufacturing town of fifty-five thousand people to give us a formal reception, but our arrival was so much delayed that the plans were called off. The entire command marched out to the northern confines of Roanne to temporary French Military Hospital No. 84 for lunch and then to a modern one story hospital just beyond the new barracks where the 1919 class of French recruits were being trained. These quarters of ours were known as No. 96, were well built with good water supply, toilets, laboratories and kitchens but no operating room facilities. It could accommodate about four hundred patients, hence our C. O. had it in mind to put in the necessary wooden huts to increase the capacity. Our weeks stay in this bustling town was a happy one except for the many flies. It was almost necessary to fight with a hornet for anything sweet that you anticipated eating. Regular courses of lectures for officers and men were instituted, hikes taken and all reasonable attempts made to acquire the proper equipment with which to start operations. Inasmuch as a Ford ambulance was the only vehicle in evidence, Private Sacco was sent to Rochefort for a Packard truck. About this time we made the acquaintance of Lieut. Clark, S. C. of Colonel Ruffner's staff in Nevers. He met us officially and condoned our lot.

Our first mail was received on July 23rd but a few fortunate ones were the only individuals interested. There were many delightful walks about Roanne and these, together with the attractive inns, were early explored by officers and men. An excursion to Perreux was much enjoyed because of the elevated location of the town and its evident ancient origin. On one of the official hikes a good photograph of the officers was taken by an itinerant photographer and the same will be found reproduced in the text. Our advent in this neighborhood was a distinct novelty to the inhabitants inasmuch as the only Americans seen hereabouts had been a small detail of engineers. It seemed to many that it was unwise to unpack to any extent because it was doubtful if our stay in this locality was to be long. The institution which we occupied was not large enough for a base hospital's work but rather suited for a camp hospital, which it afterwards became. Hence no one was surprised when on July 23rd orders were received directing the bulk of the outfit to entrain for the Mars Hospital Centre, about a hundred miles north of our present situation. Lieut. Col. Herbert, Captains Calvert and Miller, Lieutenants Tyler and Biekford and seventeen men were left at Roanne to take charge of the property with the understanding that they would undoubtedly join us later. Major Dearborn, Captain Clark, Lieutenants Hynard and Grosvenor were ordered to the Mesves Hospital Center but traveled with the Unit as far as Mars. Our train as it left Roanne at 11:40 P. M., July 24th, consisted of nine cars and progressed very slowly, arriving at Mars-sur-Allier at 4 P. M. the next day. It was then switched on the U. S. Government tracks to the hospital center about two miles beyond.

MARS HOSPITAL CENTER

Here we found a veritable city in the making, many wooden buildings completed or in some stage of construction, with much confusion and mud. This aggregation of American hospitals, which was built with the idea of accommodating forty thousand patients, had at this time a population consisting of one base hospital which had not yet functioned and a host of Chinos, French, Spanish and colored labor battalions with a few American engineers as bosses. The location of this wonderful American city was exceptionally good, with fair water supply and satisfactory drainage. A further division of the officer personnel was now necessary because of orders received upon the arrival of the Unit at Mars. After the four officers before mentioned had left on a truck with their baggage for Mesves, Lieut. Col. Honan received orders to send five operating surgeons and five assistants to Chaumont, hence it was that Captains Reynolds, White, Simpson, Lieutenants Vander Bogart and Richman with Lieutenants Arnold, Robertson, Alderson, De Tuncq and Woodmansee as Assistants, left about 11 P. M. on the same day for front line service. If it is taken into consideration that five officers were at Roanne, four at Mesves and ten on their way to the Front, it may be understood that the medical and surgical capacity of the base hospital was seriously interfered with, not to mention the necessity of entirely reorganizing the services. Lieut. Col. Honan at this time commanded the Unit with Major Grant as Chief of the Surgical Service, Captain Randall, Chief of the Medical Service, Captain Hetrick, Adjutant, Captain Leighton, Mess Officer, Captain Davies, Detachment Commander and Lieut. Strahl, Quartermaster.

Before proceeding to an account of the real work of Base Hospital No. 48 it may be mentioned that of the ten operating surgeons and assistants sent to the Front on July 25th, only two were destined to return to our Unit during the period of its activity. Fortunately, Captains Reynolds and White returned on August 13th. None of the others returned until after the Armistice was signed and in one instance, that of Lieut. Vander Bogart, not at all. He eventually returned to the United States as a casual officer. Lieutenants Richman and Vander Bogart were gassed in action and the latter received the Croix de Guerre.

A few cases were admitted to the hospital during the last three days of July but the first patient treated for battle injury was Private Glenn E. Blackledge, 166th Infantry, who was burned with mustard gas on July 30th at Chateau Thierry. On this date, August 2nd, the first hospital train arrived at 8:30 A. M. directly from the Front and contained mostly litter cases. They had come from dressing stations to Evacuation Hospital No. 7 and thence by one of our American trains directly to "48." Although Base Hospital No. 68 had arrived in Mars the day before the advent of our Unit, they did not possess an operating room, so naturally "48" received a large proportion of the serious cases. Although handicapped by the absence of no less than nineteen of our officers and a number of the enlisted personnel and lacking nurses, the professional work was ably performed. This month of August was indeed a busy one with 1154 admissions, nearly all of whom were actual war casualties and many in a very serious condition. The days on which the greatest number were admitted were August 2nd with 464 admissions, August 9th with 183 and August 14th with 235.

On August 19th, Lieut. Col. Herbert, Captain Calvert, Lieut. Tyler and nine enlisted men reported from Roanne. Next day the long expected nurses, a hundred in number with six female civilian employees, arrived and were gladly welcomed. Changes in personnel were still in order, for on the 25th Lieut. Col. Dearborn, Captain Clark and Lieutenants Grosvenor and Hynard who had been on detached duty at the Mesves Hospital Center returned. They had performed many interesting and varied duties at this Center which was to become in a hospitalization sense the only rival in France of the Mars Hospital Center. Besides commanding the first provisional hospital and taking care of a large number of battle casualties, they had performed all the professional services necessary to the successful organization of the Convalescent “Martian” Board.

Camp at Mesves-Buley. As if it were not intended that the Unit should be kept together very long, twenty of our nurses left for detached duty on this identical date, being sent to the Mesves Hospital Center.

Apart from the very busy professional work entailed upon the Unit at this time, numerous other activities incident to our American city were inaugurated. A Medical Society composed of the medical officers of the Center was formed and regular programs presented. Thus eminent specialists on temporary visits to our camp were heard and professional topics discussed. The very successful Masonic Society of the Center, which eventually had two hundred and forty-nine active members, now became a reality and about twenty-five of our officers and enlisted men participated in the meetings which continued throughout the life of the Camp except when interrupted by the influenza epidemic.

On August 25th the first number of "The Martian" appeared in mimeograph in one page form with subject matter by Private Ruhfel and cartoon by Private Ablitzer. In this connection it may be stated that Lieut. Col. Dearborn interviewed Colonel Skinner, Commanding Officer of the Center, on the subject of a Center newspaper on August 26th and a meeting of representatives of all the organizations then in the Center was called for August 29th. It was decided to continue the name "The Martian" and to have the sheet printed as soon as finances would permit. From these simple beginnings the paper developed into a six and eight page weekly which never failed to appear on time and which had a paid circulation of five thousand copies. Many halftones were produced in the later issues, giving a very complete pictorial history of the Camp. All the various units were fully written up. While it was impossible to divulge much real information until after the Armistice, nevertheless, full accounts of all social, professional and athletic activities were covered by men whose life work had been in the newspaper line. It was remarkable how many of the staff had enjoyed experience as publishers, reporters or printers. Private McKendree O'Brien of Base Hospital No. 48 supervised the printing from the beginning. Privates Ablitzer and Ruhfel were considered so necessary to the paper's welfare that they were transferred to Headquarters and relieved of all hospital work. Apart from Colonel Skinner's firm advocacy of this project, Base Hospital No. 48 was the main influence behind the venture and at a critical time in the course of its finances, subscribed very generously to continue the sheet even after the Unit had left for home. For nine months everyone looked forward to the Sunday morning appearance of "The Martian." On April 27th, 1919, the last number, No. 36, appeared and it could be truly said that it had been a great factor in the therapy of the camp. At the height of its career there were representatives on its staff, in addition to the Editorial and Managerial Departments, from Headquarters, Convalescent Camp, Quartermaster Detachment, Base Hospitals No. 14, No. 35, No. 48, No. 62, No. 68, No. 107, No. 110, No. 123, No. 131 and Evacuation Hospitals No. 30 and No. 37. This enumeration will serve to illustrate the number of units present and functioning at the Mars Hospital Center in January and February, 1919.

After the return of seven officers in late August, it was necessary to again reorganize the services with Lieut. Col. Honan as Chief of the Surgical Section and Lieut. Col. Dearborn as Chief of the Medical Section. While there was some illness among the nurses and enlisted personnel towards the end of August, nothing serious developed. The officers of Base Hospital No. 35, who had been on duty through "48's" rush period, were all relieved during the early part of September and returned to their own unit. At least twenty of our enlisted men were detached for various duties about the hospital center, some to help out the ever increasing and poorly manned Motor Transport Service, some to make a success of "The Martian," some to do technical work at the Center Laboratory and others to Headquarters so that they might serve with the Mars Center orchestra which became duly famous in our section of France. It may be noted that none of these men returned to Base Hospital No. 48 until it was ready to leave the Center in February, 1919. Another chance was given to our Unit to see active service, so on September 1st, Major Grant, Captain Clark, Lieut. Chase, two nurses and two enlisted men, left for temporary duty at the Front and did not return until December 6th. This detail was afterwards divided into two operating teams presided over by Major Grant and Captain Clark respectively and as such enjoyed a most interesting and active service. It is naturally impossible to enumerate the experiences in detail of our detached officers and men. Could they be summarized in the aggregate they would greatly increase the total share of "48's" participation in the active period of the war.

During October we were still very busy, no less than 1744 patients being admitted to what was now a fairly complete and well run institution. To the normal ward capacity of a thousand beds was added the usual tent annexes. Our wards were arranged along two streets, a term employed for lack of a better, with the nurses' quarters at the head of one street and the officers' mess and quarters at the head of the other. Facing east and at the front of our section, the headquarters building looked upon the main macadam road of the Center. Of course we had mud and plenty of it. After a short while, however, and especially upon the advent of electric lights on August 30th, no one seemed to mind the mud which was synonymous with France in the minds of most American soldiers. During October and the first half of November our hospital hummed with activity and as might be said of the preceding two months there were few empty beds although cases were rapidly evacuated from the wards to the tents and then to service, the Convalescent Camp or homeward as soon as possible.

On the 1st of October, Lieut. Col. Dearborn was transferred to the Convalescent Camp as Commanding Officer thereof, Captain Olcott was transferred to the Center Laboratory and Chaplain Mastaglio reported for permanent duty. On October 3rd, Lieut. Frohlich, our new Quartermaster, and five enlisted men—all that remained of No. 48 in Roanne—finally reported. The last of our equipment which started to arrive on the wonderful little French baggage cars on September 2nd was received in toto and in good condition by the end of October. It was during this month that "48" inaugurated the first theatrical production in the Center. With the help of a few outsiders, a good minstrel show was produced which was afterwards repeated in various parts of the community. This was but the first of many and more elaborate productions. Colonel Skinner, the C. O. of the Center, a good musician himself, was a thorough believer in the psychological value of entertainment and no pains were spared to make the Topside Theatre a profitable venture. Our hospital contributed very largely to the musical and theatrical success of the Center and no one who was in the A. E. F. after the Armistice will deny the therapeutic importance of these endeavors.

It was during the prevalence of influenza that "48" suffered her casualties all from the same dread disease, pneumonia. Private Edward Gurry died October 20th and nurses Margaret Worth, Elizabeth Weiman and Anna Breen passed away on October 23rd, November 6th and November 17th, respectively. All of these valuable members of the Unit had performed splendid and earnest work and their loss, together with one other casualty which we were to suffer later, demonstrates beyond question that it is not necessary to do battle service in order to offer the supreme sacrifice. During the last half of October Sergeants Taylor, Herrick and McLean and Privates Regin, Schuman, Perry and Whitehead were detached to take examinations for commissions. These well deserved promotions were held up because of the Armistice.

Armistice Day, November 11th, was quietly celebrated in our Hospital Center except for an evening visit from the Convalescent Camp Regiment and Band which duly serenaded all the units in the Center. A few officers and men, however, managed to get away with or without permission and enjoyed the hilarity of the neighboring villages and in a few instances, Nevers and Moulins. A description of this Day, or rather night, as it appeared in "The Martian" of November 17th is so realistic and true of the sentiments expressed everywhere and the actions indulged in that we quote it as follows: "THE DAY. Will you ever forget it,—you who were fortunate enough to be in Nevers the night of the Eleventh? Were you one of those who, locked arm in arm with a happy Frenchman, paraded the Rue de Commerce, shouting 'Vive La France!', finally pushing into a little cafe crowded to the doors with soldiers and civilians pleading with tears in their eyes for a little attention from 'Garcon'? What a night! Any man with a bugle, drum, flag, tin pan or large rosette in his buttonhole, immediately became leader of a parade organized on the spot. At the arch the crowd was thickest. You either bought a tricolor from a chic little mademoiselle or you didn't—but in either case you received a cheery 'merci, M'sieu.' When the cart containing the smiling German prisoners made its appearance, driven by a little poilu bubbling over with mirth and vin rouge, were you one of those who jumped on and stuck a little American flag in their caps? Did you stand on the street corner with three other companions, singing the 'Marseillaise' in quartette style, making an awful mess of it, but getting enthusiastic support from the audience? Were you invited to cafe en famille with the man who sells hot chestnuts in front of the news stand, with whom you have a speaking acquaintance? But wait! Perhaps you were grabbed by a cognac'd Frenchman and in spite of your struggles, given a resounding smack on both cheeks while the crowd roared with laughter? It happened to us and we're not ashamed in the least—only a little sore. This bird had a weeks growth on his face. And then the windup—reminding the driver of an ambulance bound for where you should be after Taps, that at some time or other you had helped him roll his pack and that this was the time to show his appreciation! Picking out a nice comfortable seat on the tail lamp you immediately fell asleep, waking only after you'd reached Topside, which is about a half mile from your own barracks. Were you there? We were, and Boy, we wouldn't have missed it for the world!"

It is convenient to group the period November 11th to January 15th, 1919, as one entity because it represents an easy epoch in the work of Base Hospital No. 48 as compared with the previous four months. While there was enough to keep everyone busy and to provide the Evacuation Officer with fit material for combat work or departure for home, it was nevertheless a time when everyone felt that recreation was needed. It is to the credit of all the commanding officers of the Center that they appreciated the real value of entertainment. However, many of the units did not properly institute concerted athletic activity. Had it not been for the splendid football teams developed by the Convalescent Camp and Base Hospital No. 48, there would have been little real interest in this very American game. Our Hospital team played the Convalescent Camp team before crowds of nurses, officers and men varying in number from 3,000 to 6,000 on November 10th, 17th and 28th, winning one game and losing two. Judging from the other teams seen in action on Skinner Field at the Convalescent Camp, it is admitted that Base Hospital No. 48 had the second best football team in the Center and probably could have developed the best had the men been allowed more time for practice and had more competent coaches been available.

Socially, November, December and January were very interesting months for the officers, nurses and enlisted men. On December 13th the "Red Lamp" by "the Players of 48" was given in the Red Cross hut of Base Hospital No. 35. The parts in this fine performance were acceptably filled by Misses Chalmers, Bulger and Goold, and Captain Miller and Lieutenants Broderick and Frohlich. There were special celebrations on Armistice Day, Thanksgiving, Christmas Eve, Christmas, with a proper climax New Years Eve, because then it was that the personnel were first informed that a telegram had been received at Headquarters announcing the early departure of the Hospital for the United States. Regular seven day leaves were started for the enlisted men on December 5th and thereafter for many weeks officers, nurses and men enjoyed a real treat in Southern France. A few wandered into other regions and many interesting tales could be told of trips enjoyed without funds or passes. It is surprising the amount of free travel that an energetic Yankee could enjoy in France after the Armistice. It is hardly too much to say that there was not a section of France that did not receive a visit from some of our sightseeing doughboys, whether these sections were in official leave areas or not. Only those officers who sat on Court Martials can appreciate the real romance of such a buccaneer trip.

Naturally the mutual relations that existed between our Hospital and other units in the Center were fostered not only by athletic competition but also by little courtesies extended especially by officers and nurses of the various units, one to the other. Our relations with the Convalescent Camp were particularly close because the Commanding Officer Lieut. Col. Dearborn, the Adjutant Lieut. Clark, the Police Officer Lieut. Fletcher, as well as Sergeant Ruhfel and Corporal Christie were all attached to this Camp and had graduated, so to speak, from Base Hospital No. 48. A dinner was given by the officers of Convalescent Camp on October 31st to the officers of Base Hospital No. 48 and ten attended. They stood retreat with the Commanding Officer and reviewed the troops at evening parade. After dinner there was an informal talk on the medical aspect of evacuations. On January 5th, 1919, the officers, nurses and enlisted men of "48" were invited to a moving picture show held in the Red Cross hut of the Convalescent Camp. During this function, an official Convalescent Camp order was read expressing the appreciation of the entire personnel for the services rendered by Base Hospital No. 48. This little performance was followed by refreshments and a long tramp home in the mud. It was on this same day that the six months overseas chevron was awarded to the officers and men who had come over with the original Unit.

It is impossible within the scope of this history to do more than comment upon our wonderful American City at Mars. For practical purposes, the Center began with the arrival of the first patients on August 2nd, 1918. The engineers had been busy with construction since the preceding February but it was not until the Commanding Officer, Colonel George A. Skinner, assumed his duties in the early part of June that matters started to shape up.

Base Hospitals No. 68 and No. 48 arrived on July 24th and 25th, respectively, and thereafter units reported to the camp until February, 1919, when the number commenced to decrease rapidly. The flag at Headquarters was taken down on May 14th, 1919, thus officially closing the Camp. At this time Base Hospitals No. 107, No. 110 and No. 123 were still located at Mars but expecting to go within a few days. By the first of June all American interests in Mars had ceased with the exception of the Medical Supply Depot, a few Motor Transport Corps men and the Quartermaster Department. The Engineers, who had had so much to do with the successful building operations and their consequent upkeep, left on May 20th.

Designed for a hospital population of 40,000 and a Convalescent Camp of 5,000, the Mars Hospital Center was more than half completed when hostilities ceased. A total of 37,774 patients had been cared for. Of these 438 lay buried in our own cemetery. This death rate of less than one and one-sixth per cent is a striking testimony to the splendid and general efficiency of the units represented. Base Hospital No. 68 alone treated 7,427 patients with Base Hospital No. 48 fourth in the aggregate of patients. However, it is well to remember that our own Unit had the great majority of the more serious and urgent casualties to deal with. Of the gross number of patients mentioned above over 13,000 received additional treatment and conditioning in the Convalescent Camp. The maximum population of this miniature city reached 22,000. This was at a time when the various ramifications of medical work were at their height and all Center activities such as the Symphony Orchestra, the Topside Theater, The Martian, the Masonic Society, the Medical Society and the vaudeville companies were in full swing. The coordination of all these efforts to interest the sick and wounded and to maintain the proper esprit de corps after the Armistice can be traced not only to the Commanding Officer of the Center but to the great majority of his subordinates who all worked for a common end. It was this spirit of coordination that made the Center a successful venture from the start.

Now in the piping times of peace one is apt to forget that at the beginning of the War the entire Medical Department of the United States Army numbered 8,634. This personnel reached a war maximum of 354,796, almost three times the strength of the entire army a few years before the War. The medical officers increased in number from 833 to 30,591, the Dental Corps from 86 to 4,620, the Veterinary Corps from 62 to 2,002, the Sanitary Corps from 0 to 2,919, the Army Nurse Corps from 403 to 21,480, the enlisted personnel from 6,619 to 281,341 and civilian employees from 450 to 10,695. If the proposition of taking care of an army of nearly two million men in France was a great one it was no less heavy in the United States. However, as we are principally interested in the A. E. F. activities in this summary, it may be said that a total of 300,000 hospital beds, including emergency beds and those in Convalescent Camps, were contemplated for the A. E. F. At the time of the Armistice, a little less than 195,000 of these beds were occupied. There were thus provided in the A. E. F., hospital facilities for fifteen out of every hundred men. The base hospital centers at Mars and Mesves, each with 4,000 bed Convalescent Camps, were typical of the large scale upon which hospital accommodations were provided. The hospital city at Mars with 700 buildings covering a ground space of thirty-three acres and including the usual road, water, sewerage and lighting facilities of a municipality was a first class example and the most successful of these splendid efforts.

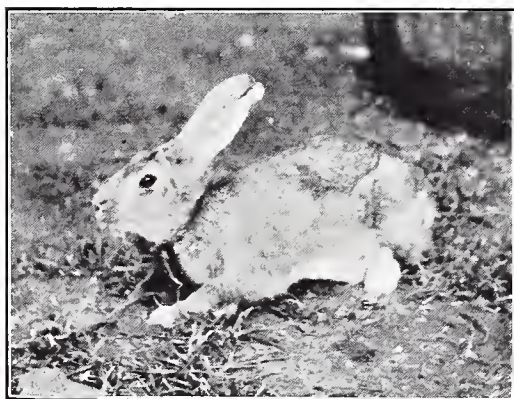

The last rites in connection with our active service at the Mars Hospital Center were now to take place. Captain Miller, on January 9th, went to Chaumont for the records necessary to our welfare before we could leave. On January 10th, Evacuation Hospital No. 37 with twenty-one officers and two hundred and twenty-two enlisted men, came in at 2 P. M. On January 12th the hospital property was turned over to Evacuation Hospital No. 37 and the next day all the remaining patients were transferred to this outfit.

On January 15, 1919, we officially ceased to exist as per the following telegram dated Tours, January 13th, 1919: "Confirming telephone conversation, Base Hospitals No. 48, No. 14 and No. 35 will cease to function as hospitals on January 15th and will close their records as of that date. (Signed) McCaw." After Base Hospital No. 48 had ceased to function actively and until February 14th when we left for the seacoast, half hearted efforts were made by those in charge to keep the personnel in fit condition by drills and hikes.

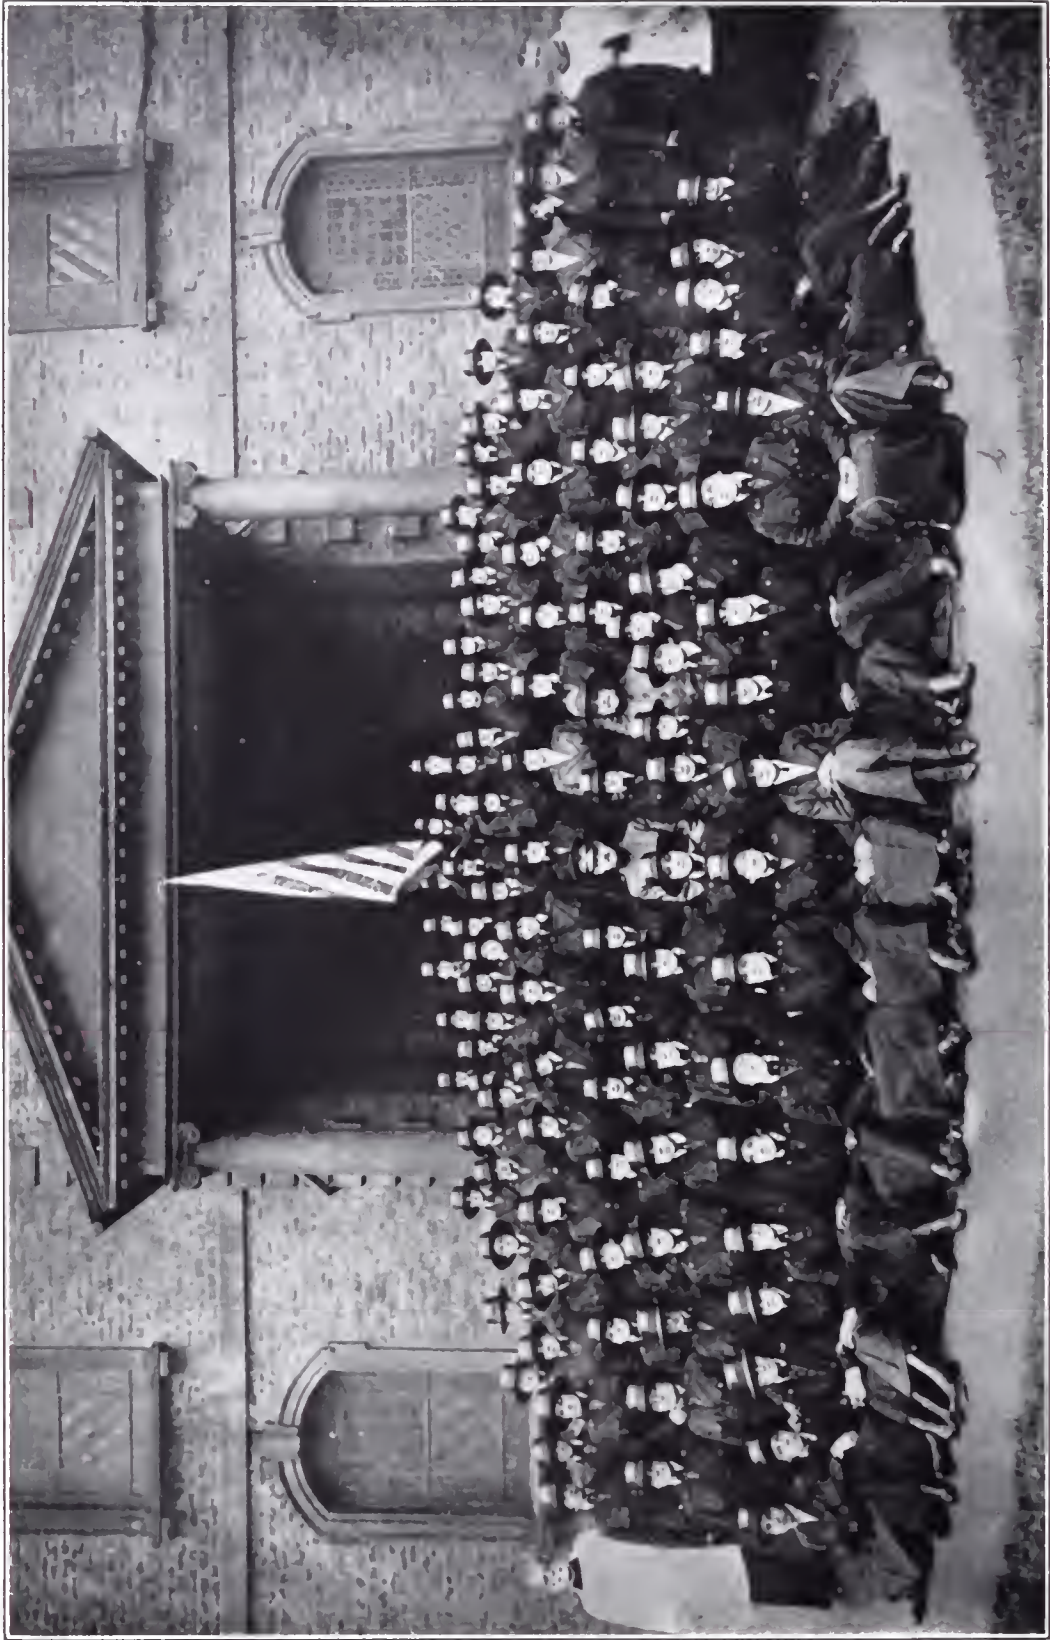

Numerous farewell parties, dinners and dances were given by officers, nurses and men, the most notable of these being a dinner given by the officers of Base Hospital No. 48 at the Hotel de Paris, Moulins, January 17th to their Commanding Officer, Lieut. Col. Herbert. Colonel Skinner, his Chief of Staff and his Adjutant graced this occasion and all of our officers barring three were present. Shortly afterwards our C. O. left for Brest and was succeeded by Lieut. Col. Honan as Commanding Officer. A number of other officers and men were away on detached duty and our nurses were gradually dispersed as will be recorded later. Volunteers were asked for to do Red Cross work in Germany. In the end, five of our men were taken for this purpose. A most unhappy loss at this time occurred in the death of Private Harold Riggs on February 11th. He was a patient in Base Hospital No. 104 and during his attack of pneumonia was most faithfully taken care of by night and day shifts of Base Hospital No. 48 nurses. This was our fifth and last loss. Peculiarly sad in that our active service was over and the Unit would soon be on its way home.

No mention of the activities of Base Hospital No. 48 would be complete without reference to the entertainment fund of the enlisted men which was judiciously and well spent and contributed largely to their comfort and happiness. Inasmuch as our Unit was not fortunate enough to have a Red Cross Hut of its own, our members were allowed to use the one located in Base Hospital No. 35 which they did to a limited extent. Some months after "48" was in full operation a recreation tent was erected for the use of our enlisted personnel, but when a real show was staged the receiving ward was taken over for this event. Shortly after our arrival in Mars a barber shop was opened which functioned successfully during our entire stay at Mars. At a period somewhat later a tailor shop was inaugurated. Both of these efforts were patronized by patients as well as the Unit's personnel. It was necessary because of our peculiar location to run a Canteen, so on October 29th such a convenience was opened by Sergeant Evans and Private Cantor. On January 10th, 1919, the Canteen was closed and turned over to Evacuation Hospital No. 37 after the accounts had been audited by Captain White. The turnover equalled 118,393.85 francs, demonstrating that we had quite a little business affair in the midst of our section of Mars city.

OUR NURSES

Before the arrival of our own nurses, Base Hospital No. 48 was so overcrowded with seriously sick soldiers that not only were extra officers detailed to help us out but small detachments of nurses from Base Hospital No. 44 at Mesves and later from Base Hospital No. 14 in Mars were temporarily attached to our Unit for service. If Miss Bengston and the nurse personnel of "48" were glad finally to find us at Mars, it is positive that the sentiments of "48" were reciprocal. Our nurses were certainly needed if ever the necessary adjunct of real nursing was essential. It is well to introduce this resume of the activities of our nurse corps by referring to the fact that regardless of from what institution they graduated, fully ninety percent had worked in civil life for officers of our Unit, hence were well versed in the technique of these officers and splendidly equipped to cooperate. In February, 1918, when the Surgeon General sent out his call for nurses to do duty in cantonments or camp hospitals in the United States, the nurses attached to "48" responded eagerly. Before June 1st, every nurse of our Unit was assigned to duty at Camp Lee, Walter Reed General Hospital, Camp Wadsworth, the Army Hospital at Ellis Island, Camp Upton, Camp Devens, Camp Meade, General Hospital No. 9, Lakewood, N. J., General Hospital No. 1, Williamsbridge, N. Y., General Hospital No. 2, Ft. McHenry, Md., Camp Dix and the General Hospital at Ft. Sam Houston, Tex.

Thus widely scattered they were, nevertheless, very happy to receive orders on July 15th to mobilize in New York City preparatory to going overseas. Arriving in New York between July 15th and 21st, the next two weeks were busily spent with daily drills, singing exercises, fittings for uniforms, being photographed and finger-printed, not to mention such details as insuring their lives, allotting their incomes and making their last will and testament. While many opportunities were offered for social activities, there was no time in which to avail themselves with the exception of a reception held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Nixon to meet the Surgeon General of the Army, William C. Gorgas. A last and fitting ceremony to their stay in New York City was the flag dedication at St. Paul's Chapel on Monday evening, August 5th, 1918. Just before this event the photograph that accompanies this article was taken.

The Unit left New York City on the S. S. "Olympic," then known as U. S. Transport No. 527, on August 8th, 1918. They were sadly in need of rest and fortunately the trip was quiet and uneventful. Such duties as were incidental to mobilization combined with the intense heat in New York City had made rest and relaxation a necessary item if the nurses were to undertake any strenuous work. The steamer docked at Southampton on August 16th and no one was allowed to leave the ship until the next day, when the nurses crossed the Channel in two small hospital boats, the "St. David" and the "St. Patrick," which reached La Havre on August 18th. On the following day, divided into two groups, each accompanied by an interpreter, the hundred nurses and six civilians left for Paris. Their arrival in this city was characteristic of the War inasmuch as everywhere there was darkness and an air raid had just taken place.

After a brief night's rest at the Hotel Regina, the Red Cross ambulances called as early as 6 A.M. to take the Unit to the train that would bear them to Mars. Evidently the getting away from Paris was rather sketchy inasmuch as Miss Entriken and Miss Pifer had slept so well and found the Parisian bed so comfortable that they just made the train. The second group, in charge of Miss Mackay, were even more unfortunate inasmuch as four nurses, the Misses Breen, LaGassick, Johnson and Tessiatore, disliking the Government travel rations, went on a tour of Paris and entirely missed the proper train. Whether this was planned or not we leave to the imagination of our interested readers. There seemed to be some doubt in the minds of the nurses as to the whereabouts of Base Hospital No. 48, inasmuch as it had been learned in New York that the entire personnel were ideally located at Roanne. However, no doubt existed when at sunset, August 20th, 1918, the nurses arrived at Mars-sur-Allier and actually found friends.

The following day real work started and during the first four months there was so much to do and so little time in which to do it that no one had an opportunity to distinguish between the agreeable and the disagreeable. Our nurses did their plain duty and without complaint and for the most part enjoyed good health, although it was during this period that the three nurses died of pneumonia, as previously referred to. It must be said that for those interested in professional service, it was a pleasure to give their best in nursing to the continual stream of wounded soldiers that poured into Base Hospital No. 48 during August, September, October and November. The bravery of these men and their gratitude for the smallest service was the best recompense that any nurse could receive. Our personnel were indeed fortunate in that they were able for the most part to remain intact in our own hospital, working under the proper supervision. With the exception of two nurses who were detached with Major Grant's operating team and a couple of others who had special assignments, our entire nurse corps were with us during the strenuous part of the War.

The work referred to above went on steadily until the Armistice was signed and then there was more opportunity for social gatherings and all enjoyed the simple affairs that were arranged for their amusement. Naturally the first real party was given by the officers of the Unit and has always been referred to as a "getting together" party. A recreation hall, the furnishings of which were supplied by the Red Cross and from the fund of "48," enabled the nurses to have many happy times especially on the holidays. About the same time that the enlisted men started on their leave, many of the nurses likewise went to Nice and Southern France and all returned with glowing accounts of the wonderful country and pleasant experiences.

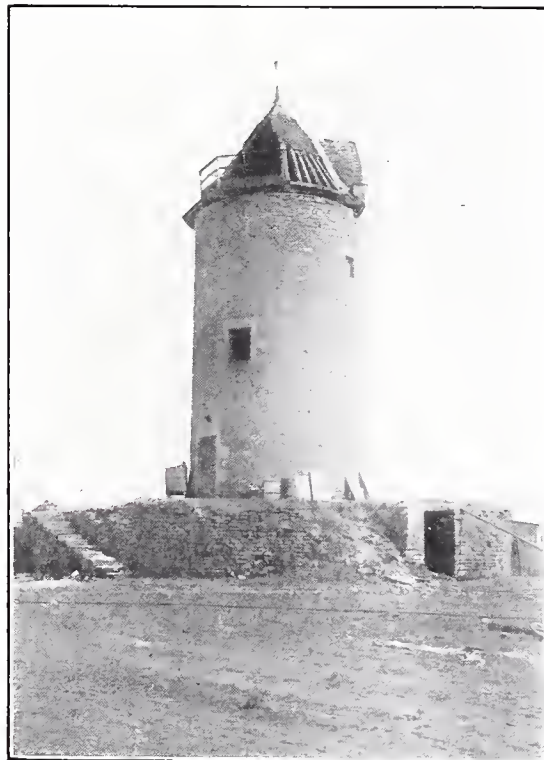

New Year's Eve was especially welcome because a telegram was received at Headquarters stating that the Unit would be relieved from duty in a few days. This was construed to mean that all would return to the United States, but like many other details in the Army this was a false notion because shortly after the first of the year the nurses in small and large groups received orders to depart for various and sundry duties. The first detachment of eight were ordered to return to the United States on January 5th. On January 12th a group of three left for Germany and on the next day six more for Treves. On January 18th, twenty nurses were detached to Dijon and twenty more to Langres, for duty in base hospitals in these localities. On January 20th, seven of the remaining nurses were detailed to Evacuation Hospital No. 49 at Menton. The rest continued on duty with Evacuation Hospital No. 37 which had taken over "48's" property until February 2nd when they were relieved from duty, awaiting further orders. On February 12th, the remaining nurses received orders to proceed to La Boule to return to the United States.

After the departure of our Chief Nurse, Miss Bengston, Miss Harriet A. Langwig acted as Chief Nurse until she too left with the detachment sent to Dijon. Then Miss Jane K. Spore became Acting Chief Nurse of the twenty-two on duty with Evacuation Hospital No. 37. It is well to mention in accounting for the nurse personnel of No. 48 that no less than eight had been returned to the United States in October and November of 1918 because of ill health. Our civilian personnel was likewise broken up inasmuch as Miss Rowell had returned to the United States on January 8th, the Misses Goold and Wade were ordered to Center Headquarters at Savenay on January 20th and Miss Bulger had been attached to our own Hospital Center Headquarters. This left the Misses Brown and Dougherty to return home with the balance of our nurses. To avoid confusion, no mention has been made here of the temporary duty performed by small groups of our nurses at Mesves, Bar-sur-Aub, Praughoy and Base Hospital No. 68 in our own Center. The Misses LeGassick and Donnelly were on detached duty during the entire active period of our hospital work while the Misses Himmelberger and Hartzell were the fortunate ones who went away on August 31st with Major Grant's operating team and did not return until December 5th, after the War was over.

In closing this brief account of the activities of our nurse corps we are happy to relate that eventually all of the personnel returned to the United States mostly in splendid physical condition and have since scattered to the four winds. A few are doing Government work or are in institutional service. Eighteen have married and left active nursing, while the rest may be found in their various home towns employed as before the War taking care of private patients. Needless to say the care used in the selection of our nursing group was demonstrated by their efficiency, loyalty and desire to help in all particulars and no Unit was ever more fortunate in her nurse corps.

PROFESSIONAL ACTIVITIES

The Registrar of Base Hospital No. 48 reported that the total admissions to that Unit from July 29th, 1918, to January 15th, 1919, were 4822, of which 2960 were surgical and 1862 medical cases. The deaths numbered 85, being a trifle under two percent of the total admissions. The admissions by months were as follows:

July	1918	9
August	“	1828
September	“	332
October	“	1744
November	“	601
December	“	280
January	1919	28
		4822

From the Operating Room report we gather the following interesting information. The number of operations performed was 332 by twenty-three different officers. Of this total number, Major Reynolds performed 84 operations; Lieut. Col. Honan, 71; Captain White, 42 and Major Grant 23 with the others scattering. When you consider the enormous number of operations performed by our men on detached service, it may be appreciated why our contribution to the cause was far greater than anything shown in this report. The first operation was performed on August 5th, 1918, being an enucleation of the eye by Captain Hetrick. The greatest number of operations performed in one day was 17 on August 26th, 1918. Six German prisoners were operated on and one or two French civilians. Miss Mackay was the nurse in charge of the operating room with Miss Chalmers as assistant, while Sergeant Herrick with Heyward, Phillip, Armstrong and Yule, all rated as surgical assistants, comprised the operating force from the enlisted personnel. Most of the anesthetics were administered by Lieutenants Tyler and Hynard.

Base Hospital No. 48, Mars Hospital Center.

The report of the X-Ray Department is especially interesting because the only rotary converter in the Hospital Center for transforming direct current into suitable current for X-Ray work, was in the laboratory of Base Hospital No. 48 up to October 19th, 1918. Hence it was that the personnel of this department, consisting of Captain Johns and his assistants, Sergeant Upham and Privates Amendola and Bamman, not only cared for the work of our hospital unit but did all the X-Ray work referred from the other units in the Center. The first case was X-Rayed on August 15th, 1918, and the work continued uninterruptedly until 660 individual cases had been radiographed with a total of 1148 exposures. The busiest day was on Wednesday, September 18th, when power was available only from 2 P.M. to 4:30 P.M., during which period seventeen cases were radiographed. In addition to the regular work of the X-Ray Department, the Signal Corps work of the entire Center was undertaken by this department and included the taking of 338 officers' identification photos and no less than 181 miscellaneous photographs in and about the Hospital Center. The importance of this last mentioned activity can hardly be overestimated and reflects great personal credit upon Captain Johns who, upon his own initiative, brought over the necessary cameras which were not a part of the official equipment. This is another illustration of the usefulness of our Unit, the best equipped in Mars.

The Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Department, under the charge of Captain Hetrick, treated 574 individual cases. The first patient was received August 2nd, 1918, and the daily attendance of both old and new cases averaged 40 during the period of our activities. The largest number of treatments on any one day was 104 on October 20th, 1918.

The Dental Department of Base Hospital No. 48 averaged 1500 dental operations per month, including 36 fractured jaws for which various plates were made, and functioned actively from the arrival of the Unit in Mars until January 11th, 1919, when the work was taken over by Evacuation Hospital No. 37. It was not until September 28th that the Dental Department was fully equipped and then it was necessary for it to do work for patients from all over the Hospital Center inasmuch as there was a shortage of dentists and dental equipment. In fact, our Department was the only dental organization fully equipped during the entire period of activities. Captain Leighton and Lieut. Hynard, assisted by Privates Krommiller, Shapiro and Morris, constituted this able division.

The Unit Laboratory was considerably smaller than first contemplated because many of the pathological activities were centralized in the Central Laboratory to which our own Captain Olcott was assigned. Lieut. Zacks, assisted by technicians, presided over this department and a large mass of work was accomplished, of which it is impossible to give the exact figures.

The Dispensary Building, in which the Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Department, the Dental Department and Laboratory were situated also contained a large room which was set apart for the treatment of out-patients. In this same building, a Surgical Dressing Station was established in August by Lieut. Chase, assisted by Private Brooks. Because of the congested condition of our regular wards, this station was provided in order that ambulant cases quartered in the tents might have their wounds dressed and at the same time receive medical attention. The Hospital was so taxed with work during August and September that it was necessary to transfer all walking cases to tents in order to accommodate the more serious surgical cases in the permanent wards. When Lieut. Chase departed on September 1st for service at the Front, Captain Malony (assigned to "48" from Headquarters) assumed charge of the Dressing Station and of the tent patients. Our twelve tents at this time accommodated over five hundred patients so it was necessary to increase the staff of the Surgical Dressing Station, hence it was that Private Perry was assigned here as clerk to handle the paper work involved in reports, clinical records and field medical records. A little later Private Pariser was detailed to assist in surgical dressings. During the active months, the Dressing Station averaged 100 patients a day. What with new admissions, the discharge of men to duty, evacuations to the Convalescent Camp and to other hospitals, the Dressing Station was one of the busiest spots in the institution during the trying days of August, September, October and early November.

Our Pharmacy was a great credit in all respects not only because it was managed by real pharmacists who took pride in their work, but because eventually it became the best equipped and largest in the Center. The early facilities were very poor and the equipment limited. However, within ten days after the inception of the dispensary on August 4th, a full line of medicines issued by the Army was in stock and later our own admirable supply came in direct from the United States. It may be mentioned here that we were the only Unit in the Center possessing a complete line of homeopathic remedies. At first this department was lodged in a small room adjoining the operating room but later was moved to the building next door and there had an opportunity to present a real drug store with shelves, tables, desks and other familiar adjuncts. The prescription business was large, averaging about 75 daily until a total of 5608 new prescriptions had been filled when the department was given up on January 19th, 1919. No account is here made of renewals because no record was kept of the same. Dakin's Solution was made fresh each day, averaging about 15 gallons daily, with Brown's Mixture and Epsom Salts Solution running a close second and third. Our Pharmacy made its own distilled water and was able to turn out many prescriptions not called for in the Medical Department of the Army purely through the cleverness of those in charge. It was an admitted fact everywhere in the Center that if a prescription needed careful handling and individual attention it should be taken to "48's" Pharmacy. This department was so satisfactory to all concerned that it was with great regret that the personnel who manned it, had to eventually turn it over to Evacuation Hospital No. 37. The Department was opened by Sergeant Fletcher who was assisted by Privates Conrad, Granger, Ledger and Hoffman. After Sergeant Fletcher was commissioned, Private Conrad was given charge on December

1st. The two officers directly concerned with the management of the dispensary were Captain Randall and Lieut. Grosvenor.

At no time during the active history of the Unit did the Medical Service control and occupy more than six of the permanent wards. One of these was largely given over to chronic cases, another to the more acute ailments like pneumonia, a third was devoted entirely to skin diseases including mustard gas burns whose treatment was not surgical and another cared for erysipelas. Apart from the month during which Lieut. Col. Dearborn was in charge of this service, Captain Randall was Chief of the Medical Service and his untiring efforts, assisted by Captains Davies, Grosvenor, Miller and Stevenson, are responsible for the successful showing made by this section of the Unit. It may here be mentioned that most of Captain Stevenson's cases, neurological and mental in character, were housed in the tents because they did not call for the careful nursing necessary to other cases and in many instances were soon transferred to less active units in readiness for removal to the United States.

The professional capabilities of a unit in the Army are often weighed by the influence that its various specialists exert in a consulting capacity. Early in the history of our activities, Captain Hetrick served as Consulting Eye Specialist for about a month. Captain Olcott was detached to the Center Laboratory in October serving as second and first assistant during the active period of operations and later became Chief of the Laboratory after the departure of the Unit from Mars. He deservedly received his Majority for this service. Captain Leighton was Dental Supervisor of the entire Center; Captain Stevenson, Consulting Psychiatrist and Lieut. Col. Dearborn, Consulting Dermatologist for the entire period of the War. After the departure of the Unit from Mars Stevenson was commissioned a Major and served as Consulting Psychiatrist to the Fifth Division, while Lieut. Col. Dearborn served as Consulting Dermatologist to the Debarkation Camp in Bordeaux and Lieut. Col. Honan became Chief Surgeon of the Clisson Area.

CLISSON

While orders were confidently expected directing the departure of Base Hospitals No. 35 and No. 48 during all of early February, they were not actually received until February 11th. Bright and early on a rainy morning known as the 14th of February, the two base hospitals just mentioned boarded a special train drawn up in the main street of the Hospital Center. This departure was watched with mingled emotions by Base Hospitals No. 14 and No. 68, for these four units had labored together in Mars for many months and until the arrival of this departing train all were on the same status. Upon starting for Base Section 1, our strength consisted of 21 officers, 179 enlisted men and twelve nurses. At the Mars station, Colonel Skinner boarded the train with orders for Lieut. Col. Dearborn to proceed to Bordeaux, but there were more assignments and inroads into our roster to come. To mention a few of these, it is only necessary to note that Major Grant, two nurses and five of the enlisted men were left sick at Mars, while immediately prior to the date of departure Captain Strahl, Lieutenants Broderick, Arnold, Bretzfelder, Zacks, Barnard, Chase and Wilson received special assignments which prevented their leaving with their own organization.

The trip to our destination on the Coast was enjoyable. By hook or by crook the enlisted personnel had procured stoves for their cars and in every way made themselves at home even to the extent of burning holes through the floors of "Hommes—36-40." In the main it was a happy lot that arrived at Bourges at 10:30 A.M., February 14th, where we remained until the following morning, thence by special train to Nantes, arriving at midnight. On February 16th, at 5 A. M., we changed cars and finally arrived at Clisson at 7 A. M., except Captain Miller who went on to La Boule with our nurses. Clisson which was doomed to bear with "48's" personnel until early April was attractively situated on hills overlooking a stream that relatively roared. However the houses, the remnants of the medieval chateau and the ancient cloisters were far more interesting than the natural scenery. The officers were billeted in the town and in the villages of Cugand and Getigne, near by. During this stay discipline was strict because it was impressed upon all concerned that our departure for home depended upon the care with which our equipment and manners were attended to. It was necessary to have frequent inspections with many drills and hikes. It cannot be said that the excursions into the country were a nuisance because all enjoyed what seemed a close proximity to home. It was at Clisson that "48's" famous basketball team beat all comers in the five games played there and the one contested in Nantes. Our court was the open end of the market place and it was here that Morrow, Defibaugh, Willis, Barrett, Wilcox, Wood, McBride and Campbell strove successfully to uphold our athletic reputation. It should be added that this same combination played its last game at Camp Upton just before the Unit's discharge and won from the infantry regiment stationed permanently at that camp.

A few officers received promotions during the waiting period in Clisson. On February 24th Grosvenor became a Captain, on March 3rd Saul received the same rank, on March 6th Reynolds received his Majority and on March 22nd those who were left at Clisson heard that Stevenson had likewise been made a Major. Again it seemed to be necessary to detach our officers and perhaps it was just as well, because while the enlisted men were very busy minding their own affairs and upholding the hospital's reputation for discipline, the officers were worn out seeking recreation that did not exist and inaugurating messes such as the renowned "Outcasts Club" at Cugand. For the greater part of this period, Lieut. Col. Honan was Chief Surgeon of the Clisson area and Lieut. Tyler acted as Detachment Commander of the Unit. On March 21st orders were received detaching the following officers to Brest to take the first available transportation to the United States: Reynolds, Clark, Davies, Grosvenor, Johns, Leighton, Randall, Saul, Simpson, Alderson, DeTmeq, Hynard and Robertson. Needless to say they gladly started on the 23rd and proceeded by the usual indirect route to Brest. Our former C. O., Lieut. Col. Herbert, was stationed here and many acquaintanceships of past days were renewed. Our two dental officers, Leighton and Hynard, won early honors and sailed for home on March 28th. The other casuals finally got away by April 6th.

HOMeward BOUND

Shortly after April 1st, the usual deep-seated rumors were afloat that Base Hospital No. 48 was finally to return to the United States. Inasmuch as the countryside was studded with the headquarters of all sorts of units, especially medical detachments and inasmuch as all of these had enjoyed numerous and well authenticated alarms, no one believed that they were really to leave until they were actually on their way to St. Nazaire. Eventually, from this port on April 13th, 1919, the great majority of our enlisted personnel with Lieut. Col. Honan and Captain Hetrick boarded the S. S. "Freedom." This craft, of small tonnage and venerable age, could hardly be regarded as a private yacht. The food was poor, the accommodations worse and of service, there was none. Nevertheless, the tedious days spent on her were joyous ones for with the exception of one man, Private "Messkit" Neustein left at St. Nazaire because he had lost his dog-tag, all of our enlisted personnel in training at Clisson were on board and homeward bound. Arriving in New York, April 28th, the Statue of Liberty was duly saluted and the boat remained tied up at a pier in Brooklyn all day waiting patiently for a ferry boat to take the Unit to Long Island City and Camp Upton. It was necessary for the Unit to endure eight days of Camp Upton until they were finally mustered out May 7th, 1919. Practically all enjoyed a forty-eight hour leave during this interval.

The roster of "48" from first to last presents the names of 50 commissioned officers, 238 enlisted men, 100 nurses and 6 non-enlisted personnel, being a total of 394. The total number of days of service was 438, divided into 133 days of home service and 305 days of foreign service. Our record of actual hospital work as performed at Mars has already been referred to. It covered a period of 171 days. To this must be added three months of actual hospital work performed at Ft. McHenry. Thus was the service of Base Hospital No. 48 officially ended. A sense of having performed their duty to the best of their ability must ever remain the fondest recollection of all branches of our personnel.

What those in authority may have thought of Base Hospital No. 48 is well demonstrated by quoting from a letter written by Lieut. Col. Honan on January 9, 1920, as follows: "Before our arrival in the United States, we found that the Surgeon General and the representative of the American Red Cross in Washington had written letters to the Commissioner of Charities of New York City, expressing in terms of highest praise their appreciation, in the name of the Government of the United States, for the memorable success made by Base Hospital No. 48 in France. In a personal interview with the Surgeon General, the Commanding Officer, as representing the Government of the United States was instructed to express his thanks and appreciation to the individual members of the organization for the efficient and successful performance of their duties in the great World War. He further very feelingly gave instructions that, as far as possible, the same measure of thankfulness and appreciation should be expressed to those good friends of the organization whose tireless work and liberal contributions enabled it to go properly equipped to successfully carry out the mission for which it was organized."

As there was no one as well qualified as the Commanding Officer of the Mars Hospital Center to testify to the work of Base Hospital No. 48, we are happy to add in closing the letter which Colonel Skinner wrote to our Medical Board.

HEADQUARTERS HOSPITAL CENTER A.P.O. 780

February 7, 1919.

Medical Board, Metropolitan Hospital,
Dept. Public Charities, City of New York.

Gentlemen:

It gives me great pleasure to report on the splendid work done here at Mars Hospital Center by Base Hospital No. 48, organized from the Metropolitan Hospital of New York, Lieut. Col. Frederiek M. Dearborn being the Chairman of your Committee, Lieut. Col. William F. Honan the Director of the Unit, and under the command of Lieut. Col. William D. Herbert, U.S. Army.

Base Hospital No. 48 reported at Mars Hospital Center on July 25th, 1918, and, with Base Hospital No. 68, cared for the first train of patients which arrived here on August 2nd. From that time on until sometime after the armistice was signed, this hospital has been constantly busy, having handled a large number of cases and always with great professional credit. The work at times has been exceedingly hard for the professional personnel as many of the doctors were called to the front, leaving us very short-handed at the rear. Colonel Honan's work in the Surgical Department has been especially noticeable. In spite of being so short-handed, the work of all the specialties has been carried on in a very satisfactory manner. The senior dentist, Captain Carlton B. Leighton, was appointed Dental Consultant for the Center, and has done work of very high order. Lieut. Col. Dearborn was detached the second day after arriving here to help establish the Convalescent Camp and other work at Mesves Hospital Center. He was returned from there and put in command of our Convalescent Camp, which is the biggest single organization in the Center. Colonel Dearborn's splendid military training admirably fitted him for this position, which has been a difficult one, and has been most successfully carried to a conclusion, as the Camp was finally closed on January 31st, 1919. During this time Colonel Dearborn also acted as Dermatological Consultant for the Center and did a large amount of excellent work.

I have only praise and commendation for the splendid, unselfish work of every member of this organization, officers, nurses and enlisted men. The character of the enlisted men was especially high and the discipline of the command has been most satisfactory. It was a great help to me as Commanding Officer of the Center to be able to call on Base Hospital No. 48 for so many men, and I availed myself freely of their ability.

Congratulating you upon furnishing the army with so splendid a unit, I am,

Very sincerely,

(Signed) GEORGE A. SKINNER,

Colonel M. C., Commanding Center.

The Recipient of the Cross Reviewing the Provisional Regiment of Infantry Stationed at the Convalescent Camp, Mars Hospital Center.

Personal Data

EXPLANATORY NOTE

IN the pages that follow will be found individual records of the men and women of the homeopathic profession who served in the World War. The data that pertains to those commissioned in the Medical Corps of the United States Army and the Medical Corps of the United States Navy is fairly complete. No reasonable effort has been spared in order that the facts here presented might be authentic and authoritative. There are undoubtedly omissions in the personal data. Our Western colleges did not possess and could not compile complete lists of their graduates who served, hence it was manifestly impossible to furnish the War and Navy Departments with complete rolls or to thoroughly check the data gathered by the Institute office. However, as far as our Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Ann Arbor and Columbus colleges are concerned the information pertaining to their alumni was all that could be desired because they were able to give the Editor full lists. Thru the courtesy of the Surgeon General of the Army over fifteen hundred names were investigated and official records furnished. We are likewise indebted to the Surgeon General of the Navy by whose permission a thorough investigation was made of the Naval Medical Corps records and hence all the data relating to this branch of the service is official.

With the exception of about twenty names of physicians who are actively associated with homeopathic societies or institutions, all of those listed in the following pages are graduates of homeopathic medical colleges in the United States. A word of explanation is due regarding the data listed under "Dental Corps, United States Army" and "Line Services, United States Army." In the first instance the one physician mentioned while a medical graduate, served entirely in the Dental Corps. In the second classification it should be noticed that the Editor chanced upon the names of those who received line commissions merely because the individuals in question had interest enough to answer the original questionnaire. No doubt there are others but it is quite impossible to procure further information. Brief notes at appropriate places in the text will serve to elucidate the incomplete character of the data listed under "Allied Services" and "Miscellaneous Services." Attention is called to the fact that italics have been employed to emphasize battle casualties, deaths in service or as the result thereof and decorations and citations of a military character. The abbreviations employed are unfortunately necessary because of the limits of our space but conform as far as possible with military usage and are uniform in character. The illustrations that follow are arranged alphabetically and are placed as near to the corresponding data as the formation of the text would permit.

On our service flag during the Great War could be found 1862 stars with 27 gold ones. These figures only embraced the records of physicians. The pages that follow give the war-time activities of 1711 of our number and assign as real war casualties, 25 names. The apparent discrepancy existing between the figures of 1919 and 1923 may be explained by the absolute indifference of some of those who served, by the death of a few and thru the revision of the records of even a smaller number.

Miscellaneous Services

The services under this heading embrace those of a military, semi-military and civilian character. To make this list complete it would be necessary to include the names of over a thousand of our number who served on the various Draft Boards and Boards of Appeal, the six hundred medical students who were enrolled in the S.A.T.C. at homeopathic colleges during the war and a few of their number who served in combat organizations, the nurses graduated from our homeopathic institutions who enlisted individually (in a number of instances comprising a large percentage of the personnel of certain base hospitals), not to mention thousands of the profession who were enrolled in the Volunteer Medical Service Corps. It is to be regretted that we cannot give a complete list of those who served actively with the American Red Cross in the A.E.F. or at home. The same statement must needs apply to the other welfare organizations. It is our misfortune that we cannot fully tabulate the large number of physicians who served as Contract Surgeons or who held State commissions in the National Guard or who performed actual service under authority of the Volunteer Service Corps. The data which follows, fragmentary as it is, makes it possible to illustrate with a few examples the diversity of the services rendered by our members.
